

Chubb

They fixed him up on the couch, where the Warden re-examined the wound, cleansed and dressed it.

During his work the Warden learned from his patient the history of events, Jennie supplementing Mr. Hewitt's account by the story of her father's arrival and his actions since.

'The brute,' exclaimed Mr. Fitzgerald, 'he ought to be made swing for it!'

'Still, he is their father, and I suppose we had no right to keep Chubb away from him,' said the preacher.

'He would have been dead long ere this, if he had been taken to that hovel,' put in the teacher.

'Where is Mr. More now?' asked the preacher.

'I left him with Jonas,' said the Warden. On hearing this the teacher stepped outside, and almost as quickly came in again.

'You are wanted out here, I think,' he said quietly to the Warden.

Going out, the Warden found that Dodge and Lanky had tried to rescue More from Jonas, but had found the Indian too many for them. With drawn revolver he had rounded