AT HOLYROOD AGAIN

CURED ME VISIT OF KING AND QUEEN WILL REVIVE ITS PAST GLORIES.

> coms Peopled With Ghosts of Princes and Nobles to Be Once More the Scenes of Gaiety and Festivity-Comparable Only With the Return of One of the Bourbon Dynasty to Versailles.

A Royal Court at Holyrood! After A Royal Court at Holyrood! After all these years the ancient palace is again to be gay with all the pomp and splendid circumstance of courtly function. Its antique towers, broad quadrangles and mighty wars will once more echo with bright laughter and the sounds of dancing feet. Its rooms, now peopled with the ghosts of princes and nobles who have held high revelry there, engaged in dark conspiracy, or taken part in still darker tragedy, will again be throngconspiracy, or taken part in still darker tragedy, will again be thronged with living men and maidens, the wit, wisdom and beauty of Scotland. Edinburgh will enjoy a brieglimpse of its former splendor. The historic Canongate, once Edinturgh's noblest thoroughfare, now a squalid thief resort, will again clatter with the carriages of the great, while it the early morning when the sun rise. the early morning, when the sun, rising from the mouth of the Forth, lights up its dark corners, ladies and gentlemen in dark dresses and brilliant uniforms will tread its silent liant uniforms will tread its silent flagstones, returning from a royal masque or ball.

The visit of the King and Queen to Holyrood can only be compared with the return of one of the Bourbon dynasty to Versailles. It is a powerful appeal to the historical sense of the Scottish people. Holyrood is to Scotland what the magnificent palaces of Versailles are to the people of France. The whole hispeople of France. The whole history of the country and of the race centres around it. There is no royal palace in England that occupies exactly the same place in the hearts of the English people, and the grey old pile, nestling at the foot of Arthur's Seat, carries much the same signifi-cance to the Scot as the Temple of Jerusalem bore to the ancient Jews. Indeed, at one time Holyrood was a place of sanctuary, to which anyone in peril could flee and be safe. Later it became a place of refuge for debtors, a use to which the trusty Scot, in the present in the same and the safe. in whom sentiment and business are so evenly balanced, did not hesitate to put it when the occasion demanded. The King, who passed a few months at the High School, which months at the High School, months at the High School, indeed overlooks Holyrood Palace, of the will be but re-visiting one of the haunts of his boyhood. At that time Holyrood enjoyed a brief renaissance, as the Prince Consort spent some time there superintending the educa-tion of his son, which was in the hands of the late Sir Lyon Play-

The two great periods in the history of Holyrood belong to the beau-tiful Queen Mary and that hero of romance, the Young Chevalier. Mary brought with her all the wit and elegance and extravagance of the French court. She surrounded herself with wits, musicians, and all the useless idlers that ornament a court. She had no adviser to tell her that cuch rank the well-asset to tell her that cuch rank and all the well-asset that the cuch rank that the second rank that the cuch rank that the her that such appurtenances were out of keeping with a poverty stricken country like Scotland, where the nobles and the clergy were as stern as the basaltic rocks that frowned upon her giddy pleasures. It was only the solitary but powerful voice of John Knox, whose house still stands only a few yards from the palace, that was raised against her practices and upon Mary shad many her that such appurtenances were out paractices, and poor Mary shed many a bitter tear under the violent cas-tigations of the rigid old Calvinist. The Young Chevatier was equally unfortunate. For six weeks Holyrood blazed with rank and fashion. Night titer hight it was crowded with gay revellers, and the Prince, by his charming manners and fine person, and the romance of his position and possible fate, captured the hearts of the Edinburgh belles, then, as now. renowned for their beauty, and made the heart of many a rich bailie sink within him at the thought of his viie's frivolity. Holyrood had its next access of gaiety when the Duke He slept in the bed that had been occupied by the Prince, who, now a fugitive, was skulking in the astnesses of the remote Highlands. The last State visit of a British was that of overeign to Holyrood George the Fourth. Edinburgh has probably never witnessed anything so gorgeous as the ceremonials that marked the visit of that monarch. Many of the Scottish nobles were the Many of the Scottish nobles wore the splendid garments donned by them for the coronation. A grand levee was held in the palace, and King George filled his Scottish subjects with exultation by suddenly appearing in the Highland costume, in which he cut "a braw figure," to quote contemporary testimony.

A great ball was given, at which, according to a historian of the scene, "the fair daughters of Scottia appeared in a constellation of unwonted numbers and brilliance, their feet already beating and bounding for the Fat people are less able to resist the attacks of disease or the shock of injuries and operations than the moderately thin. In ordinary everyday life they are at a decided disadvantage. Their respiratory muscles cannot so easily act. Their heart is often handicapped by the deposit on it, and the least exertion throws them into a per-spiration. This last fact is curiously misunderstood. It is almost universal ly looked upon as an actual "melting" of the subcutaneous fat and is considered to be nature's method of getting rid of the superfluity.

But this is not correct, for in spite of its greasy appearance sweat only contains a trace of fatty matter, rarely more than .01 per cent, and this comes of course from the cells of the sudoriparous glands and primarily from certain constituents in the blood. A per son whose limbs and body are covered with adipose tissue is in the position of a man carrying a heavy burden and too warmly clothed.—London Hospital.

Don't be forever setting people right. There is a household fiend with a memory for dates and details who can never sit still and hear papa say that he went down town on Monday at 8 without correcting the statement with the remark that the hour was half past. If mamma happens to allude to Cousin Jenny's visit as having occurred last Thursday, this wasplike impersonation of accuracy interposes with the state-ment that it was Friday, not Thursday, which brought Cousin Jane.

A dozen times a day exasperating frictions are caused by needless cor-rections of this sort, referring to matters where exactness is not really imperative, the affairs in question being unimportant and no violation of truth being for an instant intended.

There is one blouse we all love and shall continue to love during the hot weather, and that is the net lace or crochet blouse, the only lining permis sible in such a garment being mousseline de soie or chiffon. When this blouse is made of very ood lace, severe simplicity is best, and the woman who is not too thin will do well to have it made to fasten plainly with a little fullness pouching at the waist in front and the yoke piece kept as transparent as possible. Thin people should reverse this order of things and fasten the blouse in front with an enormous jabot of lace and with frills of the same over the hands. In all cases the sleeves are fairly voluminous from the elbow, and here may be introduced an undersleeve of chiffon or net.

The Function

of the kidneys is one of the most important in the human economy. Into everything we eat and drink, no matter how "pure" the food is labeled nor how careful we are, poisons enter. Were we not provided with organs especially designed against these poisons, human life would soon perish. The kidneys are the filters of the blood. They catch the poison in the food and expel it from the system. To do this they must be healthy and vigorous. When they are weak, or overworked, or clogged, or handicapped by disease in even a slight degree, they work imperfectly, or nor at all. The best remedy for disordered kidneys is

BU=JU

This latest product of medical research stimulates and tones disordered kidneys to healthy action, the poisons are cast from the system, and health returns. Bu-Ju is sold by all druggists in box of 50 pills, 50 cents. Do not waste time and money
