At a meeting of the Elmira Farmers' Club, a member said that he could top sixty bushels of mangels in three-quarters of an hour. He accomplished this by laying the mangels in a row, tops all one way, when pulling them; then, when topping them they did not require to be touched, and several tops could be removed with one cut of a long knife. He did not cut the tops off very closely, claiming that too close cutting injured the keeping qualities of the mangels as well as the turnips. On both of these plants he left all the little roots, and when storing them away threw in an occasional layer of earth, claiming that this would keep them fresher than when stored without it. The cost of raising mangels, according to his plan, he puts down at three cents per bushel.
