Mr. Mills has time and again brought the constitution of the Senate before the notice of Parliament, and endeavored to get it saltered as to make it in a sense more representative, and more under the control of the people. He has in all these previous attempts failed, not so much from a conviction that the Senate as present constituted is of any great service to the country, but rather from a feeling of reluctance to meddle so soon with such an important clause of the Confederate Act, and partly from a desire to give that body as presently constituted a longer trial. It is undoubtedly true, and the opinion is every year gaining ground, that for all practical purposes of legislation the Senate might as well be out of existence as not. Its members rarely ornamental appendage to the legislative system. They sit in serone dignity, half asleep, while a few take part in a hum-drum debate, or go through the form of sanctioning bills passed by the Commons. The argument that they are useful in checking rash or reckless legislation in the other House seems to have lost its force as far as our Canadian Senate is concerned, for we have yet to learn of any instance in which its members put their veto on the doings of the Commons. They swallowed the Pacific Railway scheme of the old Government, and when popular indignation swept its members from power—these Senatorial partizans retained their equanimity and their seats, and sat serenely defiant of public opinion.

Mr. Mills, nothing daunted by previous failures, has again brough in a new constitution for the Senate, which is not likely to pass this session, but which may form the basis for legislation at, some future time. The chief features of his new scheme are that the Senate shall consist of such members as have already been appointed for life, together with a certain number who shall from time to time be elected by the Legislative Assemblies of the different Provinces. This plan, it will be seen, which is not likely to pass this session, but which may form the above dis

Cruelty to Animals on Rail-

Cruelty to Animals on Railways.

Mr. Charlton, of North Norfolk, has introduced a bill to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railway or other mode of conveyance. The bill will serve a good purpose in securing better treatment for the poor dumb animals, and Mr. Charlton deserves credit for his humane efforts in their behalf. The bill provides that railway companies and owners of steam, sailing or other vessels shall not confine in the same car, boat or other vessel for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, any cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals, being conveyed from one place to another. The time of confinement to, he reckoned from other animals, being conveyed from one place to another. The time of confinement to be reckoned from the time during which the animals have been confined without such rest and without furnishing of food and water, whether on the railway or vessel in which they are found, or any other connecting line or railway in the United States or Canada. The unloading and feeding and watering of the animals to be at the expense of the owners, though the railway or other companies are held responsible that such attendance is regularly given.

THE LATE DISSOLUTION OF THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT.—Quite an excited debate took place in the British House of Commons on Friday on a motion brought up by Mr. Smollett, that the late dissolution of Parliament was deserving the censure of the House. He characterized the act as a coup d'etat by which the late Government sought unconstitutionally to retain power. He declared that Mr. Gladstone had resorted to a stratagem which was ungenerous to his friends, insolent to his opponents, and barely just to the nation. Mr. Gladstone stigmatized the assertion that the dissolution was secretely planned as untrue and impossible. He challenged a repetition of the word "trickater," which had been applied to him, and on the refusal of Mr. Smollett to repeat it he charged him with lack of decency and manliners. He defended the dissolution, which he declared without a division and great excitement.

The Constitution of the Senate.

Mr. Mills has time and again date.

Lieut.-Col. Skinner, of Hamilton, has announced his intention of going before the South Oxford Reform Convention as a candidate.

We understand that the bill introdused into the New York Legislature to admit Canadian insurance companies to do business in that State has passed, and now only waits the Governor's signature. The British Government have effectually disposed of the voxed question, how the sugar duties should be assessed, by repealing them altogether.

Grip comes out this week a double sheet of illustrations, and richer than ever. The cartoon people represents "Protestantism at Ottawa," the Finance Ministers office being beseiged by individuals of all kinds protesting "the duty onto sugar," and sgainstthetarifigenerally. The other illustrations are on the social questions, The enlargement of Grip will be permamert. For sale at Day's and Anderson's.
