We arrived at the town, and there Mark, after making after inquiries, found that his friends had moved a few miles out. It was not very far and we agreed to walk. To my surprise Hewitt knew every inch of the ground, and I soon gathered that he had spent a short time in the place on his way out from England.

I had recovered sufficiently to see people and understand a little I remembered in the property of the was the month in the self or the my self. It was three months before my senses fully returned and I discovered what had happened, At one time the doctors and happened, At one time the doctors on again, as the injury to the head had temporarily fected my brain.

I had been found lying apparently dead in a wood with a pistol clutched in my hand.

It was supposed that I had attempted to commit suicide. I was carried to a cottage hard by, and the people kept me there and sent for a doctor, and then it was found I was to ill to be moved.

As soon as I could remember all the circumstances I told the doctor, and then it was to ill to be moved.

As I had been robbed of my papers as well as the money I had about me, it was supposed that I had attempted to commit suicide. I was each for a doctor, and then it was of the doctor, and then it was to lill to be moved.

As I had been robbed of my papers a

Then came the wonderful news. I'd been away for two days on the farmer's business, and when I got back there was your letter waiting for me, telling me that you'd come into a fortune, and that I was to come back, and that we should be gentlefolk again and have everything that we could want.

I couldn't believe it at first. But soon as I realized what it meant, and that you wanted me to come back to England, I went straight off up to Spriggs Farm and told Belle, and then I saw her father and mother and told them, and then I summoned up courage and ask them if Belle and I were anxious to telegraph to Englandatonee, but I begreat the propagation.

wanted me to come back to England, I went straight off up to Spriggs Farm and told Belle, and then I saw her father and mother and told them, and then I summoned up conrage and ask them if Belle and I might be engaged to be married.

I expected it would be a bit of surprise to them, but, bless you, it wasn't at all. Mr. Sandys laughed and said he'd seen what was in the wind all along, and asked me if thought he was blind. Poor Belle blushed when her father said he'd known we were in love all along, but her mother told her there was nothing to be ashamed of, for I was a steady, hard-working young man, and if they hadn't thought highly of me they shouldn't have allowed me to come so often.

When they heard that I had to go back to England, and that you wanted me to go there, they hesistated a little. They didn't like the idea of Belle having to live so far away from them, and Belle said it would grieve her too much to have to leave her mother.

So we talked it over and then the farmer let out that he had an idea of giving up his farm, for which he had a good offer, and coming to England, where his wife had relatives, and that perhaps things might be arranged so that after all it wouldn't be arranged so that after all it wouldn't be arranged so that after all it wouldn't be such a big break up.

But it was agreed that Belle and I should be the such a big break up.

atives, and that perhaps things might be arranged so that after all it wouldn't be such a big break up.

But it was agreed that Belle and I should be engaged, and when I got home I was to tell you about it, and write and let them know what you said, and perhaps by that time Mr. Sandys would be able to come to England with his family. If not I should have to go back and get married there.

One of the first persons who heard the news of my having come into a fortune when the came over to the farm. He congratulated me on my good luck and asked me all about it. Of course, I told him everything.

"By Jove," he said, you are a lucky fellow. You'll live like a gentleman now for the rest of your days and have your pockets always stuffed with gold and bahk-notes, and there won't be anything you can't have and there won't be anything you can't have and there won't be anything you can't have sat smoking and talking, and all of a sudden he said:

"Will, if I ask you to do me a favor will you be offended?"

"Certainly 'not," I said.

Part of our way lay through a wood, and as it was very thick and lonely I was afraid we should lose our way and not get back again in time for the night trans. Hewitt assured me he knew the path and we kept on.

When we had been in the wood about ten minutes the path became so narrow that we could only walk one in front of the turned around. I canght the look on his face and started back, but but before I could cry out or defend myself I felt a sharp pain in my breast; and I knew that I had been shot.

I thought I heard a sound of something moving in the wood, but in a moment I fell to the ground. As I fell I struck my head violently against the trunk of a tree, and in a moment all was darkness, for my seinese left me.

When I came to myself I was in a strange place. I was a little whitewashed room, and I was in bed. I tried to raise my self and speak, but I was unable to do so. I could see a strange face beside methe face of a man—and then all was darkness again.

we have received from those who have been restored to health and strength by the use of that wonderful discovery, Paine's Celery Compound, we make a few extracts. We hope that the thousands of Canadian men and women who are suffering from nervous and wasting diseases, will profit by these true and plain statements of facts.

D. S. Davidson, of Montreal, suffered for years with nervous dyspepsia, pain in his back, and sleeplessness. He tried doctors without relief, was losing flesh rapidly, and had about given up heart when he commenced the use of Paine's Celery Compound. "Now," he says, "I am a new man. I sleep well and my food does not hurt me.'

Annie Gourley, of River Beaudette. P. Q., found the Compound a certain cure for weakness, and now feels as well as she ever did.

A customer of Harrison Bros., druggist, Hamilton, Ont., told them that he was entirely cured of nervous weakness by the use of two bottles of the Compound, after everything else has failed. The little child of Mrs. G. E. Meredith, 76 D'Arcy St., Toronto, was cured of St. Vitus' Dance by Paine's Celery Compound.
