Edward Cossey turned his face to the wall and indulged in such meditations as the occasion gave rise to, and they were bitter enough. He was bent upon this marriage as he had ever been, more so in fact, that his father was out of the way. He knew that Ida hated him—he had known that all along—but he had trusted to time and marriage to overcome that dislike. And now that accused George had brought about the ruin of his hopes. Ida had seen her chance of escape, and had taken it. There was one ray of hope, and one only. He knew that the money would not be forthcoming to pay off the mortgages. He could see, from the tone of the Squire's letter, that he did not altogether approve of his daughter's decision. And his father was dead. Like Caesar, he was the master of many legions, or rather of much money, which was as good as legions. Money can make most paths smooth to the feet of the traveler, and why not this? After much musing, he came to a conclusion. He would not trust his chance to paper, he would plead his cause in person. So he wrote a short note to the Squire, acknowledging his letter, and saying that he hoped to come and see him as soon as he could, and that he would allow him out of doors.

Meanwhile George, having delivered his letter, had gone upon another errand. Pulling up the fat pony in front of Mr. Quest's office, he alighted and entered. Mr. Quest was disengaged, and he came straight into the inner office, where the lawyer sat, looking more refined and gentleman-like than ever.

"How do you do, George?" he said, cheerily, "sit down, what is it?"

"Well, sir," answered that lugubrious worthy, as he awkwardly took a seat, "the question is, what is it? These are run times, they be; they are to puzzle a man, they do."

"Yes," said Mr. Quest, balancing a quill pen on his finger, "the times are hard enough."

Then came a pause.

"Dash it all, sir," went on George presently, "I may as well get it over. I have come to speak to you about the Squire's business."

"Yes," said Mr. Quest.

"Well, sir," went on George, "I am told that those damned mortgages have passed into your hands and that you have called in the money."

"Yes, that is correct," said Mr. Quest again.

"Well, sir, the fact is the Squire can't get the money. It can't be had, now. Nobody won't take the land as security. It might be so much water for all people will look at it."

"Quite so. Land is in very bad odor as security now."

"And that being so, sir, what is to be done?"

Mr. Quest shrugged his shoulders. "I do not know. If the money is not forthcoming, of course, I shall however unwillingly, be forced to take my legal remedy."

"Meaning, sir—"

"Meaning that I shall bring an action for foreclosure, and do what I can with the land."

"Hair Magic"
Is a good name for Dr. Doremeyer's German preparation for the hair. It really works like magic. All who have used it pronounce it as unequalled for remedying the loss of vitality of the hair roots, restoring gray hair, removing dandruff, etc. It is first-class. All druggists sell it.

ANCIENT ORDER OF FORESTERS.

Tuesday evening the regular meeting of Court Brighton was held. The meeting was well attended, and a large number being in attendance, but the meeting was a lively one. The communication from the United States was read, and a discussion at times became warm, but all were satisfied with the course taken was the most advisable. The Picnic Committee reported everything in good order for the eleventh anniversary celebration at Sprinkbank on the 23rd. The members are practicing hard for the tug of war and basketball contest. Next meeting the election of officers takes place and an interesting time may be looked for.

COMPANIONS OF THE FOREST.

The London South Circle proposed to go to Sprinkbank to Court Brighton's picnic. As next Friday is quarterly night, when the election of officers will take place, there should be a large turnout of members.

At the last meeting of Court Brighton of the election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mr. J. H. T. Jones; Vice-President, Mr. J. H. T. Jones; Secretary, Mr. J. H. T. Jones; Treasurer, Mr. J. H. T. Jones; and so on.

LODGE NOTES.

The Grand Lodge of the Peninsula Boys' meets in Brooklyn on Thursday next. A brass band is being organized among the members of the lodge. A. O. U. V. V. of Windsor.

The Sons of England and the Order of True Blue of Windsor, are holding a picnic at Old St. Paul's on Sunday last. They marched down Dundas street to the river, and were headed by the 2nd Battalion band. Rev. Mr. Wade preached a practical discourse to a large congregation.
