By Vaughan Kester
Author of 'The Prodigal Judge'

He changed his position uncomfortably. "I am at the end of my string, Evelyn," he said slowly.

"I shall miss you dreadfully, Jack. You know I am frightfully unhappy; what will I do when you go?" Marsh had made a perfect wreck of my life, she asserted.

"Nonsense, Evelyn," he replied. "You must be careful what you say to me."

"I haven't been careful before," she asserted.

He hit his lips. She went swiftly on. "I have told you everything. I don't care what happens to me—you know I don't. Jack, I am dead, despondently tired. She paused, then she cried vehemently, "One endures a situation as long as one can, but there comes a time when it is impossible to go on with the falsehood any longer, and I have reached that time. It is my life, my happiness that is at stake."

"Sometimes it is better to do without happiness," he philosophized.

"That is silly, Jack. No one believes that sort of thing any more, but it is good to teach to women any children. But saves a lot of bother, I suppose. But men take their happiness regardless of the rights of others."

"I don't always," he said.

"Yes, always," she insisted.

"But you knew what Marsh was before you married him."

"It's a woman's vanity to believe she can reform, can control a man."

"That is silly, Jack. No one believes that sort of thing any more, but it is good to teach to women any children. But saves a lot of bother, I suppose. But men take their happiness regardless of the rights of others."

"What would you have me say or do, Evelyn?" he demanded impatiently.

"She regarded him sadly."

"What has made you change, Jack? What is it, what have I done? Why do you not answer my letters? Why do you not come to see me?"

"I only learned that you were in town this afternoon," he said.

"Yes, but you had no intention of coming. I know you didn't. You would have left Mount Hope without even a goodbye to me."

"It is hard enough to have to go, Evelyn."

"Isn't that, Jack. What have I done? How have I displeased you?"

"You haven't displeased me, Evelyn," he faltered.

"Then why have you treated me as you have?"

"I thought it would be easier," he said.

"Have you forgotten what friends we were once?" she asked softly. "You always helped me out of my difficulties, and you told me once that you cared a great deal for me, more than you should ever care for any woman."

"Yes," he answered shortly, and was silent.

He would scarcely have admitted to himself how foolish his early passion had been, for it was at least sincere, and there could have been no sacrifice. At that time, that he would not have willingly made for her sake. His later sentiment for her had been a disfiguring and a disgraceful thing, since it carried him back to a time before he had wrought only misery for himself. He had understood his reticence, she could not realize that she had lost the power that had once been hers.

"What a mistake I made, Jack," she cried, and stretched out her hands toward him.

"He fell back a step."

"Nonsense," he said. He glanced sharply at her.

"How stupid you are!" she exclaimed. She half rose from her chair with her hands still extended toward him. For a moment he met her glance, and then, disgusted and ashamed, withdrew his eyes from hers.

Evelyn sank back in her chair, and her face turned white and she covered it with her hands. North was the first to break the silence.

"We would both of us better forget this," he said calmly.

She rose and stood by his side. The color had returned to her cheeks.

"What a fool I am, John North," she pined softly. "And I might have made the tragic mistake of really caring for you!"

"I think there is nothing more to say, Evelyn," North said slowly. "It is growing late. You must not be seen leaving here."

She laughed.

"Oh, it would take a great deal to compromise me; though if Marsh ever finds out that I have been here he will kill me. But she still lingered, still seemed to invite."

North was silent.

"You must be in love, Jack! You see, I'll not grant that you are the saint you'd have me think you are. You are in love, for he colored angrily at her words."

"He interpreted her harshly."

"Don't speak her name!"

"Then it is true! I heard that you were, but I did not believe it. Yes, you are right, we must forget that I came here today."

While she was speaking she had moved toward the door, and instinctively he had stepped past her to open it. When he turned with his hand on the knob, the smile had left her lips, they were mere self-satisfied and her face gray-white, very close to his.

"What a fool you are, Jack, what a coward you must be!" she struck him on the cheek with her gloved hand. "You are a coward!"

"His face grew white as her own, and he did not trust himself to speak. She gave him a last contemptuous glance and withdrew her veil."

"Now open the door," she said insistently.

Child Almost Strangled

You never know what minute a chill will develop a cold or be seized by croup. For this reason it takes a great burden of every mother's mind to have at hand Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine.

Mrs. E. W. Silver, South Milford, Annapolis County, N.S., writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine for my little boy, with most satisfactory results. His throat would fill up with phlegm so that he could scarcely make a sound, and I thought he would surely strangle. He grew worse, and had frequent bad attacks, so I began using Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Scarcely half a bottle was used when the strangling ceased. This medicine had a wonderful soothing effect, and when he had taken two bottles I could not tell that he had any throat trouble. We have also used Dr. Chase's Ointment with equally good results. It is a grand medicine for all ailments."

There are imitations, but the genuine Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine bears the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author.

CHAPTER III. Strange Bedfellows.

When North quitted Marshall Langham's office, Gilmore, after a brief instant of irresolution, stepped into the room. He was crudely handsome, a powerfully-built man and with ruthless lips showing red under a black waxed moustache. His hair was inclined at a "sporty" angle and his strong even teeth were bared in a grin of triumph. He was dressed in a suit of dark, heavy material, and he carried a large, ornate, and aggressive presence.

"Howdy, Marsh!" said the newcomer easily.

"From his seat before his desk Langham frowned across at him."

"What brings you here, Andy?" he asked, ungraciously enough.

"Gilmore buried his hands deep in his trousers pockets, and with one eye half closed surveyed the lawyer over the tip of his lifted cigar."

"You're a civil cuss, Marsh," he said lightly, "but one wouldn't always know it. Ain't I a client, a friend—and, excuse me, any one of which is sufficient to bring me into your esteemed presence?"

"Why?" asked Gilmore, lazily tolerant of the other's mood.

"Because then, nothing more than I can do for you," said Langham shortly.

"Oh, yes, there is, Marsh, there's a whole lot more you can do for me. There's the distinguished prosecuting attorney, without you to talk sense to him he's liable to lie to all sorts of queer people who take more interest in my affairs than is good for them; but as long as he's got you at his elbow he won't."

"If you wish him not to forget it, you'd better not be so particular in reminding him of it; he'll get sick of you and your concerns," retorted Langham.

"Gilmore laughed."

"I ain't going to remind him of it; what I got you for, Marsh, it's your job. He took a step nearer Langham, while his black brows met in a sudden frown. "I know I ain't popular here in Mount Hope, I know there are plenty of people who'd like to see me run out of town; but I'm no quitter, they can't suit me if Moxlow won't have it. That's your job, that's what I hire you for, Marsh; you're Moxlow's partner, you're Marsh's son, and it's up to you to see I ain't interfered with. Don't tell me you can't do anything more for me. I won't have it."

Langham's face was red, and his eyes blazed angrily, but Gilmore met his glance with a look of stern insistence that could not be misunderstood.

"I have done what I could for you," the lawyer said at last, choking down his rage.

"You know you haven't hurt yourself," said Gilmore insolently.

"Well, then, why do you come here?" demanded Langham.

"I came old business, Marsh," he lounged across the room and dropped, yawning, into a chair. "There was silence between them for a little space. Langham fussed with a paper, and Gilmore squinted at him over the end of his cigar."

"Same old business, Marsh," Gilmore repeated lazily. "What's the enemy up to, anyhow? Are the good people of Mount Hope worrying Moxlow? Is their sleepless profession, eh? Can you answer me that?"

"Moxlow has cut the office late," said Langham briefly.

To Be Continued.

PLENTY OF COKE HERE SCARCITY ELSEWHERE

Both Gas Works' Product and Coal Are Stocked in Abundance.

Londoners have one cause to rejoice, and that is that there is a plentiful supply of coke in the city. In Ottawa the situation at present is very acute, and the dealers there have been importing it from Montreal, but even that has not satisfied the demand.

Upon inquiry at the different offices of companies handling coke in this city the Advertiser was informed that there was no scarcity, and that the quantity on hand would satisfy the demand for the remainder of the winter.

It was also stated that coal was more plentiful at present than it was some time ago.

"NA-DRU-GO DYSPEPSIA TABLETS

Proved of Great Value to Me

There is only one explanation for the numbers of enthusiastic letters that we receive praising Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, and that is that these tablets certainly do cure any kind of stomach trouble.

Here is a typical letter from Miss Eliza Armstrong, Causo, N.S.: "It is with pleasure I write to inform you that your Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets have proved of great value to me. I tried remedy after remedy but without any lasting good. Having heard of your tablets I tried them at once, and I decided to give them a fair trial. They proved satisfactory in my case."

The remarkable success of Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets is such a success as can only come to an honest remedy, compounded according to an exceptionally good formula, from pure ingredients, by expert chemists. If you are troubled with your stomach, ask your Druggist about Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, compounded by the National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, and sold throughout the Dominion at 50c. a box.

EAST END HOUSEWIVES WANT OWN MARKET

Women Object to Paying Ten Cents Car Fare to Reach City's Centre.

East London housewives strongly favor the establishment of a market in the east end. An Advertiser reporter recently interviewed twenty housewives, and a number of the businesswomen in that part of the city, and there was not a dissenting voice found among the women, while those commercially interested were evenly divided.

Taking this canvass as a criterion of opinion of the residents east of Adelaide street, the East London Progressives have good backing in their campaign for a market.

The sake of convenience and the undesirable expenditure of ten cents return car fare to buy at the present market, were the principal reasons advanced by the ladies why they should have a market in East London.

A number of the businessmen bitterly oppose the market, declaring that it would never pay, and that the downtown district proves too much of a magnet for the farmers to stop in East London to sell their produce.

If No. 3 committee does not respond to the demands of the Progressives and establish a market, the latter body will circulate petitions in East London.

MANHOLE BLEW UP GRAND TRUNK LORRY

Man, Horse and Wagon Lifted Fifteen Feet in the Air.

[Canadian Press.]

Toronto, March 7.—The Consumers' Gas Company employees were seeking for a leak in a gas main at Simcoe and Front streets this morning at 7:45 o'clock, a manhole blew up just as a G. T. R. lorry with a load of furniture was crossing. The wagon, man and horse were lifted 15 feet in the air, but the man escaped serious injury.

The leak in the gas main was the cause and the employees were building fires to thaw out the frozen ground close by. The windows in the G. T. R. freight shed and some in the Grand Union Hotel were smashed, and the guests at the hotel jumped out of bed to see what the trouble was. The gas on fire in one of the holes dug by the men is burning at the rate of 15,000 cubic feet an hour at a cost of 70 cents a thousand and feet.
