OPINIONS OF THE CANADIAN PRESS.

"A volume, the perusal of which will make many feel themselves better men and women. The love of truth, a tender sympathy on every page. . . . Such books as 'Old Man Savarin' leave their footprints on the sands of time."—The Mail and Empire.

"Some of the best authorities in the newspapers of the United States do not hesitate to say that some of the sketches are equal to anything which has been written by Barrie or Kipling. This is high praise, but we believe that the discriminating reader will not deem it extravagant. . . . Humor of a high order pervades them all, but it is always directed and chastened by good taste, and, as in the case of Barrie and a few other writers of the first-class, adds both charm and intensity to the deepest pathos."—Educational Journal.

"The delineation of the characters of the McNeills is the strongest piece of writing that has appeared from any pen in a long time. It brings us close enough to the borderland of the supernatural to inspire awe, but attempts no intrusions. It is, if we may be permitted to hazard an opinion, unsurpassed in the literature of the day, and the writer who is able to put forward such a sad suggestion of the operations of the human mind upon itself when diseased with sorrow, is capable of literary work of a very remarkable order."—Catholic Register.

"Mr. E. W. Thomson is one of the masters of the art of story-writing, and some of his short stories are unsurpassed in narrative skill, character drawing, humor and pathos. . . . Such a collection of short stories does not often come in one's way, and one naturally wishes to share the pleasure with others."—Montreal Gazette.
