

Startled and piqued with this News, they immediately betook themselves to the Governor-General of Canada, being determined to expostulate the Matter with him, but he well understanding their Foible, easily pacified them, and sent them away well contented with this Answer, That the Treaty of Utrecht made no mention of their Country; an Evasion which 'tis no wonder they had not Eyes enough to see into; on the contrary, they took the Words in their plain and undisguised Sense. After this, the Indians grew very troublesome, and began to pilfer the Cattle that belonged to the English, who knowing the shortest Way of putting an End to this Proceeding, would be to secure some of them, and keep them as Hostages for the good Behaviour of the rest, took that Method with them.

Nettled with this Piece of Justice, the above-mentioned Castin spirited them up to a Revolt, and acting in a double Capacity, both as Governor of the Country for the King of France, and Chief Sagamo among the Indians, he appeared at the Head of a numerous Body of them, and demanded their Hostages to be released. The English fixing their Eyes upon the Leader, in the first Place secured him, and after keeping him several Months Prisoner, obliged him for his own Safety to go (happily for himself) and take possession of a good paternal Estate at Bearn in France.
