To Nervous Sufferers.

It is not a very pleasurable task we have undertaken, that of issuing a treatise to Nervous Sufferers and those afflicted with Chronic Diseases. What we chiefly wish is to gain the confidence of our patients and the public, and hope by a straightforward statement of our object and plan of treatment to permanently merit that confidence. But we have many difficulties and prejudices to overcome before that end can be obtained—the greatest of these is the fact that numerous imposters have advertised worthless preparations at different times, and those who have so often been deceived fear again to trust themselves to advertised remedies. In
