It is about time to begin to bestir ourselves. Is that manure forked over? I take it you have a barn-cellar. Who would be without a barn-cellar in these days, unless he has covered sheds over his whole barnyard as some do? There is some objection in keeping hay and live stock over a tight barn cellar, after all; but it is infinitely better, on the whole than throwing out the manure to lie under the drenchings of the eaves, to smutch up the sides of the barn. An abundance of absorbing material, like dry peat, muck or loam, will obviate the difficulty of the cellar in part, and proper ventilation and a tight floor will also help.

Now is the time to feed out the mangolds. I suppose you have some ruta bagas and carrots left. A daily feed of roots to cattle and sheep is very grateful at this season.

It is a good plan to start some early potatoes in boxes, or a hot-bed, to be transplanted when the weather permits, in the month of April or May. Look out for the sheep and lambs. The woodpile may need attention, too; it is n't best to leave this to bother us in the midst of spring work, when it may be easily done now.

WHEELS ON PLOWS.—The best way to secure a uniform depth in plowing is to use a beam under the end of the beam. An unskilful plowman can make better work with this addition, than a good hand without it.

A man who covers himself with costly apparel, and neglects his mind, is like one who illuminates the outside of his house and sits within in the dark.

The road ambition travels is too narrow for friendship, too crooked for love, too rugged for honesty, and too dark for science.

He that avoideth not small faults, by little and little falleth into greater.

As a man drinks he generally grows reckless. In his case, the more drams the less scruples.
