THE HONEY BEES OF COMMERCE

The weekly review of J. S. Bache & Co., written by W. W. Cornwall, which is something more than a market letter and frequently rises to the plane of financial literature, says this week:

"When money is so pessimistic it is time to begin to drop the sounding lines to see how far they will bottom. Wall street always studies the problem, and such times as this, acutely. To forecast it means millions to the investor and the administrator. Wall street is studying the problem now and carefully recording all observations.
