'If Amundsen landed safely in a lead of open water somewhere near the Pole, as I believe, there is nothing to fear. He has one month's food, each warmer. Things are breaking his way.
Why shouldn't he take his time?
"I believe he headed straight for the Pole, and when he thought he must be about there he landed, only to find that his calculations were off 50 or 100 miles. That is easily possible the way the compass works in those latitudes. Then he set out for the Pole.

NEW YORK, May 28—The New York Herald-Tribune says today that negotiations for the acquisition of the Leviathian and five other trans-Atlantic liners operated by the United States Lines for the shipping board, are under way.

The United American Lines and Moore and McCormack are both prominently mentioned as being interested in the deal.

Perhaps he landed in a lead, only to have it close in on him, and he had to haul his planes out on the ice. He may be waiting for it to open up again before taking off for home. I fully believe he is safe and will return."

Moore and McCormack are operating a fleet of freight ships for the shipping board to Cork, Dublin and Cardiff, and a second shipping board service to Copenhagen, Danzig and Helsingfors.
