

CAPE DESPAIR, and the Leander shoal, which lies off it, have been described in page 82, vol. 1. The course from that cape to Macquereau point is W. by S., and the distance 23 miles. In the bay between them are Grand river, Little Pabou, Great Pabou, and Newport.

GRAND RIVER, 7 miles westward of Cape Despair, is a considerable stream, but has only 2 feet at low water over its bar. There is a village and a considerable fishing establishment there; and immediately to the westward of the river a shoal extends fully half a mile out from the shore.

LITTLE and GREAT PABOU are fishing-places, fit only for boats or very small craft. There is but a foot of water over the bar of the former at low tide, and ordinary springs do not rise over 5 feet. Great Pabou, which is a similar, but much larger place, had 5 feet over its bar at low water when it was surveyed, but the depth and situation of the very narrow channel change with easterly gales.

NEWPORT, situated S.W. $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Great Pabou, and 6 miles N.E. of Macquereau point, is another fishing-place, where a small vessel or two may be moored, (under shelter of a shoal, and at some risk,) to take in fish during the summer months.

MACQUEREAU POINT is of bold and dark-coloured craggy rocks. It is also wooded, and rises to about 200 feet above the sea.

PORT DANIEL, 7 miles west of Macquereau point, is a fine bay, open to the eastward, and about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles wide and deep. In the northern corner of the bay, half a mile within White point, which is high and of white limestone, a small river enters the bay through a sandy beach, after descending a beautiful valley between wooded hills. There are many houses and stores near the entrance of the river, which will only admit boats at high water, being nearly dry when the tide is out.

A shoal extends half a mile from the shore all around the port south-westward from White point to West point. West point is of craggy gray limestone, with a high and remarkable semi-isolated rock at its south-east extremity. It is the south-west point of the port, and bears S. $\frac{1}{4}$ W., 2 miles from the river's mouth; on its north side there is a small cove, and a good landing for boats. Daniel hill, about one mile to the westward of West point, and rising 400 feet above the sea, is remarkable as the highest land close to the shore on this part of the coast. It serves to point out the situation of Port Daniel, as does also Red point, which often appears like an island close to the shore.

Supplies of wood and water may be obtained at Port Daniel, but fresh provisions are not plentiful.
