

at the Woolwich Academy. The old man was a strong Tory. My father's father was also a Tory, and his own mother was down on Mackenzie all her life. Curiously enough her reason for this was that three or four of her brothers were put in prison for joining Mackenzie during the rebellion. Her father was a Macdougall, born in Oban, Argyleshire, a Highlander who made his living making furniture. All his people had been in the army. Captain Macdougall, a brother, had lost a leg in the battle of Waterloo. He was a profane old soldier, who could tell from personal experience about the man who had held the gate at Hugeront at the time the French tried to force it. He used to enjoy unscrewing his cork leg and putting it to one side and telling children of the Napoleonic Wars. Others of the Macdougall stock had foot in Flanders and elsewhere. My father's mother's mother was a McIntyre of Inverness.

The father of Wharrear, a jeweller in Toronto, was in the same battery as my father's father.
