In contrast with Mr. Laurier, though he is cast in a much more massive political mould, we notice that Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, leader of the Liberal Unionist party of Great Britain, has not hesitated to come down with a definite No one can charge him with policy. having played fast and loose with that burning question-Home Rule; but in default of its settlement, he has boldly come out with a demand for social reforms, which he and many others have made up their minds must no longer be deferred, pending the passage of what appears for the present to be impassable legislation on the Irish question. His social reform measure looks to the furnishing of state aid to artisans for the purchase of homes of their own, and for the granting of old age pensions. When we look outside of the criminal and thriftless class to the large number of honest men and women, not alone in the Mother Country, but even among ourselves who, in the ordinary course of things, and through no fault of their own, are unable to live upon what they earn and in the event of whose death their families are plunged into dependence upon their neighbors and friends, if not as in England upon the rates, we shall see the wisdom of the two provisions in Mr. Chamberlain's programme which we have Better, far better, we say, to named. assist people to secure homes of their own while they are able to work and pay for them by the exercise of industry and frugality, than leave them when old and helpless to become the dependents of the Old Country Boards of Guardians or the occupants of the jails and refugees whereever they may happen to be. Better, too, to organize a pension fund to which they can contribute, however small an amount, when in their full health and streng h, than have them standing at the street corners appealing for aid or the objects of the attentions of those charities whose mission is to relieve the poor whom under present conditions we have always with us. We say that in our opinion there would at an early day be effected a considerable saving in the public expenditures in this direction, while another effect would be to put an end to what in that event might be eventually called the crime of pauperiam, for the sturdy indeendence of the people would come to regard, save under exceptional circumstances, th se who were not self-supporting or provided for by their friends, as offenders against the laws and institutions of the country. This is a kind of politics that is far more beneficent than the wranglings among partizans and the disputations into which the discussions of and Dominion revenues. Some of them the most vitally important topics have the tendency to degenerate.

Then, Mr. Chamberlain's bill proposes to limit the hours of labor in shops and factories, to restrict pauper alien immigration and provide a new Employers' Liability Act. These are all objects of the most desirable description. The limitation of the hours of labor which has to be provided is not, however, the subject about which we hear so much among the blatant demagogues in these days. No man need give more than a fair day's labor for a fair day's pay, and no honest employer will expect more, the remedy, should a grievance exist, being in the hands of the men themselves, while few disputes, after recent experiences, will be sllowed to go the length of extreme controversies without the assistance of some outside instrumentalities being invoked. But what is wanted is to put a stop to the system of white slavery that is known to exist in many cities under which certain descriptions of cheap clothing are put together, and cigars are manufactured, etc. Pauper alien labor must, be restricted, and we question if our American neighbors are at all astray in the steps which they are so vigorously taking against alien-not to mention pauperlabor. We know in Victoria how much its introduction has disadvantaged our own fellow citizens. As for the liabilities of employers, let them be defined to the strict limit of justice and then let them be enforced without the slightest waver-

Referring to Mr. Chamberlain's proposed reforms, there are two of them which occur to us as of singular appropriateness to the conditions of this Province. One is that of assisting people to establish themselves in their own homes, the other is that of making provision for old age pensions. It may be said that we are a young community and cannot possibly embark in such enterprises. Besides, there are some who will say that it is none of the business of the Province to deal with such matters; moreover, they will allege that our conditions are such that there is no necessity for making this departure. We have, it may be said, no pauperism among us, and there is no use in meeting the devil halfway. But there is a good old maxim that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and the depression that has everywhere prevailed has been sufficient to show to Victorians and to British Columbians that there are people among us whose distance from want in only so great as a few days lack of work may determine. At present most of these are householders who pay rent to some one, and in one way or another contribute to the municipal, provincial were only a few months since assisted in their extremity by individuals or institutions. Some of them, too, were in possession of little properties, in the purchase or construction of which they had expended some of their earnings. Some of those properties have either been mortgaged up to quite as much as they would bring at the present time, and upon others the mortgages have already been foreclosed. We are looking forward to the time when these people will be in full work again and when it might be possible for them to once more put something by.

The Provincial Government has in the past—though that policy has now been abandoned-expended considerable money in bringing out settlers. Why, then, since some of the long-headed statesmen of the motherland have deemed it by no means outside of their function to do something towards establishing people in their own homes, could not something of the kind be considered here by the Parliament which is so soon to meet? The provincial credit is good and it has been able to ra se on advantageous terms the money that was required for enterprises in no way more commendable. As THE COMMERCIAL JOURNAL has more than once observed, there is an element among us whose energies at present are not being turned to the best advantage. Why not put an experimental colony on the land and give them what might prove to be the opportunity of their lives? As for the pension scheme, that might be deferred pending the result of the other experiment in the direction of paternal government. The people, if once they were established on the land, would become consumers of manufactured products, for which the home market would be by so much increased. This subject is at least one which should have attention.
