SUBJECTS OF BRITAIN.

The Law of the Empire Covering Birth

It is natural that we in these tight little islands, should jealously guard the social advantages, the protection and field for advancement which are enjoyed by those who can claim to be British subjects. in the eves of the law there is considerable confusion as to the necessary qualifications which outsiders must show before they can be admitted to all the privileges of citizenship. On this account the Home Secretary appointed an interdepartmental committee 18 months ago to report "upon the doubts and difficulties which have arisen in connection with the interpretation and administration of the acts relating to naturalization, and to advise whether legislation for the amending of these acts is desirable, and, if so, what scope and direction such legis-lation should take." Who is a British subject? The committee point out that: "To the common law belongs the fundamental principle that any person who is born within His iesty's dominions is from the moment of his birth a British subject, whatever be the nationality of either or both his parents, and however temporary and casual the circumstances determining the locality of his birth may have been."

The child of an alien enemy born in a part of His Majesty's dominions which is at the time in hostile occupation is not a British subject. Again, the child born within the British dominions of an Ambassador or other diplomatic agent accredited to the Crown by a foreign sovereign is not a British subject. The limits of this latter exception have not been exactly ascertained. The King's son is always a British subject, wherever he may be born. With this exception the acquisition subject of the status of a British by parents rests on statute law. A person whose father or parental grandfather was born within His Majesty's dominions is deemed a natural born British subject, although he himself was born abroad.

To the category of persons who are British subjects by reason their birth having taken place within His Majesty's dominions must be added those who are born on board a British ship. Some doubt exists as to the extent of this rule. There seems to be no doubt, the committee remarks, that a person is a natural-born British subject who

(a) Born on board a British ship of war, wherever such ship may be.
(b) Born on board a British merchant vessel on the high seas. It is suggested that a simple rule should be made that any child on a foreign ship while in British waters should not be deemed to be a subject of this country, owing to this accident of birth; but, on the other hand, an infant who first looks out on life under the white and red ensign, wherever it may fly affoat, apparently a subject of the King, although he be as black as ebony or his father be this country's most ly enemy.-London Telegraph.

Trial by Combat.

The Dymoke claim to the King's companionship reminds one, says The London Morning Chronicle, of antiquity of the office, which Was ed by the Conquerer after the battle of Hastings, when the dignity was conferred on Robert de Marmion, Lord of Fontenay. But the championship is closely interwoven with the trial by How many Britons, we wonder, are aware that Trial by Combat formed an essential part of British juris prudence until the beginning of the reign of George IV., or how it ended? At that time there being charge of murder against a certain Abraham Thornton, the gentleman was advised by his counsel to claim the right of "trial by battle." cordingly, when brought before the of King's Bench, he flung down his gage. A solemn argument was afterwards held on the case, when the judges were unanimous that he to wage his battle. The nearest male relative of the deceased, a lad of 16, being manifestly unable meet Thornton in combat. declined The pubany further proceedings. lic feeling was so much outraged that the Attorney-General of the day mmediately introduced a bill for abolishing the right of appeal in all criminal cases, a bill which, however, did not pass without opposi-

West Australia's Premier The new Premier of Western Australia, Mr. Alfred Edward Morgans, is another example of the fact that political preferment in Australia is not blocked by foreign birth or ex perience. Mr. Morgans was born in Wales, and was living in Mexico, where he was numbered among the friends of President Diaz, when the gold fields of Western Australia were discovered. He settled in Coolgardie, and in due course was its representative in the Legislative Assembly, where he was a strong supporter of Sir John Forrest, now a Minister in the Federal Government. Mr. Morgans is the principal pro prietor of the Mount Morgans mine, on the Mount Margaret gold field, and has started fruit farming on an extensive scale.

A Queer Joint Deputation. A joint deputation from the churches and the amateur sporting associations is indeed, as a contemporary says, something in the nature of a curiosity. Such a combination recently waited upon the Chief Secretary of Victoria, Australia, to pro-test against the invasion of cricket and football matches in Melbourne by professional bookmakers. The clerical section wanted betting made penal offence by act of Parliament; sporting section would be tent with powers to evict the bookmakers as "undesirable persons."
The Minister considered the latter a reasonable proposal and promised to embody it in a bill.

TWO MAIDEN SPEECHES.

after he had failed in his contest a a Radical for the borough of High Wycombe) Benjamin Disraeli, sitting in the Strangers' Gallery of the House of Commons, listened to the debate on the address in which Lord John Russell Macaulay, Stanley, Bulwer and other leading members of the House took part. Next day he wrote to his sister: "Was at the House of Commons yesterday during the whole of the debate-one of the finest we have had for years. au ay was admirable, but, between ourselves, I could floor them all. This entre nous. I was never more confident of anything than that I could carry everything before me in that House. The time will come.

The time did occur four years later, when on Dec. 7, 1837, Disraeli having been returned as a Tory, stood up in the House of Commons to make his maiden speech. story of that historic fiasco has never been fully told. What is generally known is that Disraeli was interrupted by bursts of ironical laughter almost from the beginning of his speech, and at length, utterly unable to catch the ear of the House, he concluded by shouting at the utmost pitch of his voice the famous phrase: Though I sit down now, the time will come when you will hear me." But the whole episode, what led up to it, and what followed it, is most interesting.

The subject of the debate was a motion by Mr. Smith O'Brien for a Select Committee to enquire into the alleged practice of vexatious pe-titioning against Irish members elected in the popular interest. Daniel Connell supported the motion, and it had been arranged that Sir Robert Peel should reply; but the stronglyexpressed wish of Disraeli that duty might be given to him, backed as it was by many members of his party, induced the Tory leader to give way to his ardent young re

There had been an absurd, though very bitter quarrel, between O'Connell and Disraeli. O'Connell was one of Disraeli's sponsors when he car ried the Radical flag on the bustings at High Wycombe in 1832. Three years later, Disraeli having turned Tory, attacked the Melbourne Administration, which was retained in power by the Irish party, for having clasped as he put it, "the bloody hand of O Connell." O'Connell retorted in a speech of a savage vitu-peration in which he declared that Disraeli's life was a "living lie," and that he was a "descendant of the impenitent thief on the Cross." Disraeli challenged O'Connell, but the Irishman, after killing D'Esterre in 1815, had made a vow against duelling, and always wore a black kid glove on his right hand as a token of his lifelong repentence for having shed another man's blood. "Then," were face to face at Philippi-in the House of Commons, with, happily, the floor between them. Disraeli's failure on this occasion was not due to nervous timidity, but to the less amiable fault of over confident fluency, to the young member's self-assurance of manner, spired, obviously, by the conviction that he was about to leap into Par liamentary fame at a single bound This, with his foppish attire, his affected gestures, and the knowledge of his rapid change of political opinion, carried the British Radicals and the Irish Repealers, both led by the lusty lungs of O'Connell, to indulge in roars of ironical laughter and other disconcerting cries.

Macaulay, writing to a friend in Paris, a few days later, said: "Speaking of the House, Disraeli nearly killed it on Thursday night." You have, of course, seen his speech in Gaglinani. Can you conceive the impudence of the Attorney-General not knowing him personally, and go-ing up to him in the lobby and saying, A very pleasant speech of yours, Mr. Disraeli. Will you be kind enough to tell me what Lord John held beside the keys of St. Peter?'
The red cap of liberty, sir.' During the performance Peel quite screamed with laughter."

Gladstone's first appearance as speaker in the arena in which he was for so long a period the most eloquent and predominating personality was obscure and disappointing. He took his seat as a member for New-ark on Jan. 29, 1833, the opening day of the first session of the first Parliament elected under the Reform

Act-being then 23 years old. Three weeks later, on Feb. 21, made his maiden speech. A petition signed by 3,000 Whigs of Liverpool was presented alleging bribery and corruption against the Tory repre-sentatives of that town, and in the discussion which followed, Gladstone interposed on behalf of the electoral honor of his native place.

"Every great orator from Demosthenes to Burke," Gladstone once said, "has suffered from nervousness on the eve of an important speech and although I cannot claim to share their gift of golden speech, I can claim more than a fair share of their defect of nerves." Certainly, he was extremely nervous on this occa-sion, as his indistinctiveness of utterance and hesitancy of manner only too obviously showed. That voice, which subsequently held so many thousands spellbound by its music was inaudible from the galmusic was inaudible from the gal-lery in which the reporters were tak-ing notes. So little notice did this debut attract, that a speech deliver-ed in the House a few months later by his brother, Thomas, in defence of their father, who was an owner of slaves on his estates in Demerara, has often been described in biograph-ical sketches as Gladstone's maiden effort.—Macmillan's Magazine.

The question of electrifying its entire system is engaging the attention of the London and North-Western
