

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE STING OF DEATH. In a biographical notice, giving an account of the last days of a good man who was distinguished for his serene and lofty faith, he is reported as saying, "I appear to suffer, but I do not. It seems as if some angel were standing by me, he bearing all the pain, and this poor body of mine only exhibiting the outward signs of it."

A striking instance of the same kind occurred not long since, within our own knowledge. A lady of exalted piety was suffering from protracted and fatal illness, and at certain intervals there came spasms and convulsions, giving externally all the symptoms of intolerable agony.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

AGRICULTURE.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.—INOCULATION.—Within the past ten years, dangerous losses have been met with in some parts of Europe, by dealers in cattle, from a comparatively modern disease named pleuro-pneumonia; it is most prevalent in the marshy districts of Holland, but is not confined to them.

The following highly interesting notice appears in a late number of the State of Maine Newspaper. The Leviathan Steamship. The following highly interesting notice appears in a late number of the State of Maine Newspaper.

GREAT CROP FROM ONE ACRE. Mr. John T. Andrew, of West Cornwall, Ct., in a letter to the Country Gentleman, states that last year he raised 3,103 bushels of the common long white turnip on one acre of land, with a profit of $207 30.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

AGRICULTURE.

THE LEVIATHAN STEAMSHIP. The following highly interesting notice appears in a late number of the State of Maine Newspaper.

GREAT CROP FROM ONE ACRE. Mr. John T. Andrew, of West Cornwall, Ct., in a letter to the Country Gentleman, states that last year he raised 3,103 bushels of the common long white turnip on one acre of land, with a profit of $207 30.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

AGRICULTURE.

AGRICULTURE. The following highly interesting notice appears in a late number of the State of Maine Newspaper.

GREAT CROP FROM ONE ACRE. Mr. John T. Andrew, of West Cornwall, Ct., in a letter to the Country Gentleman, states that last year he raised 3,103 bushels of the common long white turnip on one acre of land, with a profit of $207 30.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

AGRICULTURE.

AGRICULTURE. The following highly interesting notice appears in a late number of the State of Maine Newspaper.

GREAT CROP FROM ONE ACRE. Mr. John T. Andrew, of West Cornwall, Ct., in a letter to the Country Gentleman, states that last year he raised 3,103 bushels of the common long white turnip on one acre of land, with a profit of $207 30.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

AGRICULTURE.

AGRICULTURE. The following highly interesting notice appears in a late number of the State of Maine Newspaper.

GREAT CROP FROM ONE ACRE. Mr. John T. Andrew, of West Cornwall, Ct., in a letter to the Country Gentleman, states that last year he raised 3,103 bushels of the common long white turnip on one acre of land, with a profit of $207 30.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

It is a most beautiful and beneficent law, and when the mind is exalted with great conceptions, or filled with an all-absorbing love, the body becomes less sensitive to its infirmities and sufferings, and sometimes forgets them altogether.

Advertisements for various products and services, including a notice for 'The Fairy Queen' and a notice for 'The Rev. Mr. C. H. Templeton'.