"Himself" Books.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

All fiction, or rather all that is not simply parrot talk, is, to some extent biography. An author writes either about his own experiences and emotions, or what his own experiences and emotions have taught him by an analogy.

But some novels are much more autobiographical than others. Almost every writer has written one book which is himself. And, to my mind, this book is nearly always the best. Of course, you understand that I don't mean that all the incidents in the book actually happened to the author. Far from it. These autobiographies are not photographs, they are more like impressionistic paintings.

Dickens' Picture of Himself.

Take Dickens. I believe "David Copperfield" is generally conceded to be his own story. It is also rated as among the best, if not absolutely the best, and is certainly the most generally beloved of the great man's works.

"Pendennis" is Thackeray's himself book. I have not read enough of Dickens to feel that I have any right to pass an opinion upon his writings, but Thackeray is one of my favorite authors and so I feel justified in mentioning the fact that "Pendennis" is to me his finest work.

"Jane Eyre," which in some of its incidents is so close an autobiography as to have aroused tremendous resentment among those whose treatment of the heroine is described, is certainly the best known and best liked of Charlotte Brontë's books.

The Real Cranford.

"Cranford" is emphatically an autobiographical book and even learned critics are unanimous in agreeing with ordinary readers that nothing Mrs. Gaskell ever did, touches this exquisite record of her visits to her old friends in Cranford (Knutsford in real life).

"Pride and Prejudice," I believe, is Jane Austen's herself book and is the most widely read, and, in the minds of many, the best. Although, since all her books are pretty much autobiography it does not stand head and shoulders above the rest.

I doubt if there are many books in the whole world more widely read and more universally loved than "Little Women," and of course I don't need to tell you that is the closest kind of autobiography.

The Fun of Guessing.

With the authors of our own day we have no historians to tell us what is autobiography and what is not, but it's lots of fun to guess.

"Sentimental Tommy," I feel sure, is the story of the little boy Barrie. Bunker Bean is another hero whose personality seems autobiographical for two reasons—firstly, because it doesn't seem possible that anyone could have imagined such states of mind and, secondly, because he is so much above the rest of his creator's work.

A magazine which was advertising its willingness to pay a high price for good short stories, named sincerity as the most important quality of a good story. Tenderness, love for one's fellow-beings, seems to me another. Now these are the qualities that the autobiographical stories are by their nature richest in. What wonder that we love them?

BASEBALL.—This evening a practice match will be held by the Wanderers and B. I. S. preparatory to the formers' contest with the Cubs on Wednesday.

Hr. Grace Notes.

The many friends of Mrs. Tucker were sorry to hear of her serious accident yesterday. It seems that Mrs. Tucker was going to the barn about 10.20 and accidentally fell on the steps breaking her leg at the hip. She suffered much pain and was some time before she could get assistance. Her brother, Mr. R. S. Parsons, who lives near was at last attracted and helped her home. To make matters worse, Capt. Tucker is very sick, and his friends are fearing that the end is near.

The schr. Studland, with a large number of freighters, left on Thursday for Labrador. A message was received from her to-day informing friends of those on board that she rode out the storm at Catalina.

Little Miss Lela Stanley, who spent some time at school here, died at Boston on May 31st of diphtheria. This little girl was a niece of Magistrate Fitzgerald, and made many friends while here, who will learn with regret of her death.

Mr. Selby Parsons fell near his home on Saturday and bruised his face considerably.

Mrs. James Cron and her daughters, Misses Mary and Lilly, went to St. John's by Saturday evening's train to see Volunteer James Cron before he sails for England. The best wishes of all Jim's friends will accompany him on the voyage.

The schr. Alma Nelson is now discharging a cargo of coal to Messrs. Murray and Crawford.

The shopkeepers are commencing their weekly holidays on Wednesday, 16th inst., to continue until Sept. 22. On these days then, the clerks will have a chance to "pity" the working class.
