Miraculous Escape.

Mr. George Smith, a workman employed repairing the Cove bridge on the G. T. R. over the Thames, met with a severe accident yesterday afternoon. In company with some fellow laborers he was endeavoring to pry up a "stringer" with an improvised lever of timber of about three-inch stuff when the lever broke and Smith, loosing his balance, fell to the ground, a distance of about 30 feet. When his companions picked him up it was found that two of his ribs were broken and that he had received several ugly bruises about the body. The unlucky workman was conveyed to his home on Langarth street, where medical aid was summoned and the fractures set. On the road to the man's house the men say they met a man in a buggy driving slowly along the road and asked him to drive the injured man to his home but he refused.

John Has a Secret.

The following is clipped from the Saginaw, Mich., Courier of Aug. 27, with the above heading, and concerns a former Londoner, Mr. John H. Davidson, ex-manager of the Grand Opera House here. The wedding is announced to take place about the middle of September: "John H. Davidson, treasurer of the Academy of Music and a citizen of excellent repute, is soon to be wed to Miss Libbie Grant, of Windsor, Ont., and thus do straws show which way the annexation wind blows. She who is soon to be a happy bride is an estimable young lady, a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families in the ancient Canadian town, Mr. Grant having served the city in various official capacities, and she will receive a warm welcome to Saginaw. Mr. Davidson has purchased property at the northwest corner of Washington avenue and Hayden street, upon which he will erect a neat and substantial home, plans for which have been prepared."

The Captain Gave No Warning.

Yesterday afternoon a party of picnickers repaired to Springbank to spend the day and evening amid the rustic beauties of the place and had a very pleasant time. When they made up their minds to come home about 8 o'clock in the evening they were greatly disconcerted at the non-arrival of the steamer. Although they waited patiently it proved to be like the letter of the popular song, "it never, never came." Among the party were Mr. J. R. Minhinnick and family. The former, after a tiresome tax on his patience telephoned to the city for a hack. This he filled with exasperated excursionists and started for home. The remainder of the party were brought home on one of the lorries used for drawing pipes to the waterworks extension. As Captain Foster gave no notice of the withdrawal of the evening boat the party naturally feel aggrieved.

"Fakirs" Visit London.

It is reported that two young men, R. B. Ford and J. H. Graham, who have been mixed up in shady advertising fakes in Toronto and Montreal, are operating in London. In Toronto they got out a lithograph of the Board of Trade building and solicited advertisements to put upon it. By false representations they secured a number of advertisements and collected a considerable sum of money. They then left the city suddenly. They next loomed up in Montreal, where they commenced the publication of a "Fireman's Souvenir." Again they obtained under false pretenses sums ranging from $500 down. We have not heard what scheme they are working on our London business men.—[Canadian Grocer.

Two men thought to have been the principal characters of the preceding paragraph arrived in the city on Civic Holiday and went to work with their pet take. On every possible occasion they pulled the C. P. R. into the discussion, making use of that company's officials' names and alleged letters as a passport to confidence. They are credited with having secured $50 from Mr. John Labatt, and several other merchants are thought to have been duped. The men left the city after a few days' sojourn and have not been heard of since. The C. P. R. Company declare the men to be fakirs and deny any connection between them and the company.

An Adventurous Trip by Londoners.

Capt. Cartwright lives in London, Ont., a gentleman of an adventurous turn of mind, and, happily, he is mated to a lady of the same temperament. It occurred to this worthy pair that they would pay a visit to his father, a Kingstonian, and that they would make a portion of the journey, from Toronto to Kingston, by water, in a canoe. This was decided upon. A tent was necessary. The husband cut out the requisite material, and the wife most deftly sewed the pieces together by the aid of a machine. The workmanship is excellent and the whole tent (8 ft. x 7 ft.) is a most creditable piece of work. In a few days all preperations had been carried out. The shape of the tent is two uprights with a ridge-pole between. The distance between London and Toronto was performed by rail. At Toronto the canoe was launched, and in it were placed the tent, a few stout blankets, a waterproof sheet and a few days' provisions. Finally the gentleman with his wife and their 2½-year-old little girl stepped in, and on Saturday, the 9th of August, a start was made for Kingston. Skirting the coast and following the curves of the numerous bays this tardy trio progressed. Each evening, at or about 6 o'clock, a convenient place for camping was sought for and found; the tent was pitched, the kettle put on and the evening meal prepared. The supplies, taken in at Toronto, lasted till Cobourg was reached, and there, were replenished. The boat was fitted with a sail which was little used, the principal mode of propulsion being with paddles, the wife sharing this labor equally with the husband. The distance covered on each of two days was 40 miles. One day the journey was curtailed, as the gentleman did not feel very well. On Monday, the 18th inst., the canoe, with her three passengers in excellent health, reached Kingston, and were warmly greeted by expectant relatives.—[Kingston News, Thursday.

The case will be tried at Melbourne on Sept. 5.

Rambling on the River Bank.

In accordance with arrangements made at the annual meeting of the Ontario Entomological Society, the visiting officers and as many of the local members as could do so, formed a party at the rooms of the society yesterday morning and drove to the country for "a day in the woods." The locality visited was the scrubby thicket just below the Cove bridge, on the north side of the river, and the field proved so rich that, though the whole morning was spent in studying its fauna and flora, one of the London members expressed himself as disappointed that the party had found so little of what there was to be obtained. However, each of the collectors brought away considerable material for study, and none could fail to admire the immense stature of the native burdocks, and specimens of a lactuca and of one of the ragweeds (ambrosia trifida), which when brought out for measurement proved to be eleven feet high. Mr. James Fletcher collected a number of roots of finnleaf (jeffersonia diphylla) for the collection of perennials at the Central Experimental Farm. The entomologists made some rare captures of some commoner though interesting species. The ornithologists were delighted with two golden-winged warblers (helminthophaga chrysoptera), and all agreed that the outing, as well as the meeting, was the most enjoyable that the members had participated in for many years. After leaving the collecting grounds the party drove west and crossed the river at Byron, passing in by the waterworks, which, however, time did not permit them to visit.

The Congregational College.

The school room of the First Congregational Church was comfortably filled last evening with an audience, assembled to hear Principal Barbour, of the Congregational College, Montreal, discuss the workings of the institution with which he is connected. Rev. R. Neale occupied the chair and introduced the speaker.

Dr. Barbour, in opening, pointed out the great necessity for the proper education of ministers of the gospel, holding that such was requisite for the proper fulfillment of their spiritual duties, which were clearly set forth in Paul's Epistles to Timothy, wherein was contained what was expected of a servant of Christ. A minister should be well cultivated in mind, and with that goodness which would make his care of souls natural—not in a professional way, for fame, for money, or any worldly consideration. In referring to the college work the speaker dwelt on enlightened instruction in the Word of God as a prime necessity with them, also as a characteristic of their people. The Congregational College was better off now than ever before; it was better attended than ever before; it was better provided with the necessaries of a student's life than ever before; it got more money than ever, and yet it did not have half enough. The equalization of wealth was talked about, but it should be concentrated in some cases, for who would not wish to drink from a well rather than a shower? This winter the college would have every room occupied, including many young men from Ontario and some from the cream of Canadian society. He would warn the boys against the girls, because, out of the five gold medals given by McGill University, three were awarded to young ladies. The speaker concluded his entertaining address with a recital of the advantages to be derived from a course of instruction at the Congregational College at Montreal, which was the only one conducted by that denomination in Canada. Mr. Barbour's manner of delivery is entirely unrestrained, and he speaks in a conversational way that renders him thoroughly at home with his audience.

The proceedings closed with a scriptural reading by Dr. Barbour, singing and prayer. A liberal collection was taken up during the service.
