It puzzles everyone except the melancholy Knight and his followers to see how Canada can go into a Commercial Union with the United States and still maintain her present friendly relations with Great Britan. It puzzles the people of Canada, who persist in looking at this question in the clear light of day and not through Sir Richard Cartwright's blue courses. And it puzzles the United States newspapers, who sensibly take the view that such a union would undoubtedly mean the severance of the tie which now connects Canada and Great Britain.
