Fall Work on the Farm.

The most important work at this season is the measurement of the manure. It is the farm savings bank, and pays good interest if the manure is handled in a manner to prevent loss.

THE LIQUIDS. The most valuable portions of manure are the liquids. Entering farmers are careful to save this, and with suitable drains to carry it to the manure heap...

ASBESTOS MATERIALS. One of the advantages of manure is its even distribution over the soil. Manure spreaders do this work in an excellent manner...

MAKING SHEEP PAY. A wool grower of great experience writes to Farm News that if the American farmer obtains the complete actual experience in making mutton sheep without taking great pains, he is laboring under a mistake...

FISHER & SHAW, BRIDGETOWN, NOVA SCOTIA. MANUFACTURERS OF STAIR-WORK, DOORS, SASHES, Mouldings, Etc.

Thinking our friends and patrons for past favors, we wish to inform them that we are at our old business, and are better prepared than ever to furnish supplies for the building of Churches and Private Residences. We are assured that those who favor us with their orders will find it largely to their advantage, for the following reasons:

1. We have on hand a good stock of air-dried lumber as can be produced in the country. 2. A drying-room unexcelled in the province. 3. We get up steam at any time to accommodate patrons living at a distance.

By prompt attention to business we trust to maintain the confidence and respectability of the public in general, and especially solicit orders.

The Household. Choosing Children's Associates. There is nothing more important, nothing that more affects the individual all through life, than the character of associates during one's earlier years. It is absolutely necessary to surround children with the proper kind of companions if they are to grow up self-reliant, self-respecting, honest and well-bred.

To this end the home-circle must be widened and must take in much more than the immediate family. What shall be the course of study, what school be best, what garments are suitable to wear and the most nutritious food, are matters that engross a good share of the attention of many heads of families, but it is rare indeed that thoughtful and conscientious consideration is given to the selection of proper associates for children. The youngsters go out, meet comrades of all sorts and form acquaintances and friendships utterly without advice and restraint from their parents. If some boy or girl is particularly bad, the children are forbidden the companionship. Very many times this prohibition amounts to absolutely nothing, for the forbidden friend is pretty sure to be on hand on all occasions. Then there is punishment that seems unjust and therefore is the source of irritation, and often means more persistent clinging to the child who is objected to. There is a much stronger element of justice among children than most people seem to imagine. If they are told to avoid one of their playmates, they must have a reason for it and a good one. If the objection does not strike them as well taken, they are apt to let matters run on pretty much as they may, evading responsibility and punishment by declaring they cannot help it, for the children will come into their play and there is no way for them to do except stay up to the games altogether. Of course, this is not to be thought of, and the restriction goes for nothing.

Parents out at all times have a watchful eye upon their children's companions, and, that, too, in their own home-circle. It should never be too much trouble to have the children's friends around the house. To be sure, they make a good deal of noise and confusion, but this is for the most part harmless pastime, although it may, on certain occasions, be extremely annoying. Every parent should systematically cultivate the acquaintance of children in other families. When people have children to train, they take upon themselves with this responsibility an obligation to do the very best for them their circumstances will allow, and this obligation can never be met by shirking one of the things that is all-important, a strict watch over the mates of the little ones.

A house that is too good to be opened for games and pleasures for the young will some day have a cloud hanging over it, caused by the wrong-doing of these same responsibilities. Nerves that are too sensitive to bear the noise and racket of children's company are very likely, in later years, to be torn with agony at a wasted life, mispent time and possible criminal conduct. By all means set apart some portion of the dwelling for the benefit of the younger members of the household, and let their friends, chiefly in the hall and the well-lit hall, have their proper place in the management of home affairs.—E. Bright Children.

Never allow children to use their brains to excess. It is as bad as any other excess, and the result would be very serious. Some children are very ambitious, and will strain themselves to stand first in their classes; they are also discouraged in their "ambitions" by foolish parents who have false pride enough to desire their little ones to outshine others—no thought being given to any other result of the undue activity of the brain. Such parents should be carefully watched, and plenty of outdoor exercise, play, and anything that will tend to rest the brain, should be encouraged; hold such children back in their studies whenever possible. Many children have their lives shortened greatly by their parents' pride in their mental precocity.

Joker's Corner. He Was the Other Man. I was going over to Hokenok the other day when one of the passengers on the life-boat begged a light from my cigar. He was one of the greatest and most incoherent-looking men I ever saw, and his speech seemed to give him away for a New England farm hand. As he evidently wanted to be friendly, I chatted with him for a few minutes and then asked: "Did you meet with any adventures while stopping in New York?" "No, nothing to brag of," he replied. "No, nothing to brag of," he replied. "Did you lose your wallet?" "No—wallets all right." "Didn't change no $10 bills for strangers?" "Not a change." "And I hope you didn't let a green goods man make you a victim." The old man winked at me and chuckled by way of reply. "Then you did fall in with some of the profession?" I persisted. "Well, rather," he quietly replied. "And you didn't lose your money?" "Not as I know on." "But did you beat the game?" He winked and chuckled some more, he whispered: "No—wallets all right." "Didn't change no $10 bills for strangers?" "Not a change." "And I hope you didn't let a green goods man make you a victim." The old man winked at me and chuckled by way of reply. "Then you did fall in with some of the profession?" I persisted. "Well, rather," he quietly replied. "And you didn't lose your money?" "Not as I know on." "But did you beat the game?"
