First Impressions of the Vatican.

First Impressions of the Vatican.

The ordinary tourist first sees the vatican from the square as he approaches from the bridge of Sant Angolo. But his attention is from the first drawn to the front of the church, and he but vagody realizes that a lofty unsymmetrical building rises on his right. He pauses, porhaps, and looks in that direction as he ascends the long low says of the basilica and wonders in what part of the palician and wonders in what part of the palician and wonders in what part of the palician and wonders of photographs shakes yards of poor little views out of their gady red bindings, very much as Leporelio unrolls the last of Don diovannis conquests. If the picture peddier sees that the stranger gluece up at the Vatican. In forthwith points out the corner windows of the second story, and informs his victim that Sua Santita inhabits those rooms, and promptly ofters photographs of any other part of the Vatican but that. The teurise looks up currously, and finally gets did of the vatica by buying what he does not want, with the charitable intention of giving it to some dear, but treeounc relative at home. And ever afterward, perhaps, he associates with his first impression of the Vatican to the Satican. Sea pergrace features of the man who sold him the photographs. "The Vatican." by F. Marion Crawford, in the August Contury.

The Plague of Locusts in Africa.

The Plague of Locusts in Africa,

Three plagues have visited this part of the country in recent years: first of mice, which ate up three sets of the rice and the property of the rice
and the property of the rice and and demestic, and killed all the buffaloes; and now the locusts. As I returned from Kopa-Kopa an immesse cloud of locusts were darkening the air.
They sped along at the rate of four miles an hour, settling on every patch of maize, millet, or sorghum. All the natives were out, old and young, beating drums, shouting, rushing her and there, and beating crops with swishes to drive the pests away. In spite of their efforts the crops will be destroyed.
The natives are very careless about the future: knowing well that they are always subject to locusts, they do not take the precaution to grow manice, which locusts do not eat.—From the diary of the late E. J. Glave in the August Century.
