But the two great Perfons you addrefs, at present engross the public Attention. The noble Lord has great Merit both to his Country and his Prince; his early Zeal cannot be forgotten. His extensive Influence, his perfonal Authority, exerted as they have been, and as I truft they always will be, for the Good of his Country, will always challenge the good Opinion of his Countrymen. Nor will our Country forget to do justice to the active Spirit of that great Man, to whole unwearied Efforts Great Britain is fo much indebted for her prefent Glory; to whom you and I, Sir, owe it, that in a War with fuch a Power as France we now debate whether our Country should use Mode-I mean not, Sir, to make any ration. Comparison, for it is not now a Time to draw the nice Line between the Merits of great Men, or to afcertain exactly where the Merit of the one ends, and the other begins. Comparisons are always invidious, and might at this Time be hurtful, and tend to weaken the Bonds that unite fo many in the Service of their Country.
