GEN. FOCH GIVES UP ACTIVE COMMAND

French List of Promotions Records Detachment From Active Service.

Paris, April 5.—Gen. Ferdinand Foch, the hero of the battle of the Marne, has been detached from active service. A list of promotions issued today contains a brief announcement to this effect. He succeeded as general of division by Gen. Labord.

Another well-known leader who has been detached from the active service is Gen. of Division Evroux, military governor of Dunkirk, and former head of a military mission which reorganized the Greek army in 1913. Five generals of brigades are retired, their places taken by colonels who distinguished themselves in recent operations and who are given temporary rank of generals. Gen. Lyautey, former minister of war, is re-appointed resident general in Morocco, the post he held prior to joining the British ministry.

The main says that Gen. Foch will remain on the active list. His services

Amazing Power of Bon-Opto To Make Weak Eyes Strong

Doctor Says It Strengthens Eyesight 50 per cent. in One Week's Time in Many Instances

A Free Prescription You Can Have Filled and Use at Home.

Victims of eye strain and other eye weaknesses and those who wear glasses, will be glad to know that according to Dr. Lewis there is real hope and help for them. Many whose eyes were failing, say they have had their eyes restored by this remarkable prescription and many who wore glasses say they have thrown them away. One man says, after using it: "I was almost blind. Could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without my glasses, and my eyes do not hurt any more. At night they would burn dreadfully. Now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me."

A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear. I can read even fine print without glasses." Another who used it says: "I was bothered with eye strain caused by several years, both for work and without them. I have worn glasses for several years, but for some time I have been without them and I could not read my own name on an envelope or the type writing on the letter. After using Bon-Opto, the fluttering leaves on the trees across the street now, which for several years have looked like a dim green blur to me, I cannot express my joy at what it has done for me."

It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitude more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be will be at the disposal of the minister of war.

Gen. Foch is 66. He is a Basque, and spent his early years in Metz. After the war of 1870 he devoted himself to preparing for the next struggle with Germany.

At the battle of the Marne Gen. Foch held the centre of the French line with 120,000 men. He was opposed by 200,000 Germans, including the Prussian Guards. Gen. Foch delivered the decisive blow of the tremendous conflict.

Paris police state he admits being the man up the pole, but denies the actual shooting.

THE FORMAN MYSTERY

By GEORGE HUGHES.

But in the meantime a surprise had been prepared for them. As they approached the door of the apartment they became aware that there were other tenants within. The guard pushed open the door and they saw, seated in a chair between two standing men, a third man. Warrenner recognized two of the men instantly. They were Barton and Waller, headquarters men. But the man in the chair Warrenner had never seen before. He was a young man, little older than Warrenner, but his thin face bore traces of some deep trouble. His head had been dropped over his chest and his gaunt hands folded over each other on his knees until the bones shone clearly through the transparent skin. Warrenner and the others entered; but at the sound of their coming he straightened himself and stared curiously at them. Suddenly Warrenner saw the man's eyes dilate and the lines of his face draw taut. His bony hands lifted, and grappled with the chair nervously. He half rose from it. Warrenner wondered at the change in the man and the cause of it. He followed the stranger's eyes and saw that they rested upon the woman behind him. What happened next Warrenner had scant time to notice. "I'm dead," he said. "I'm dead." And he fell forward toward the stranger. Then came the agonized cry wrung from the mother heart. "Peter! my son!"

In the courtroom Mr. Bright, counsel for the defense, was talking animatedly with a young man. "Your honor," he pleaded, addressing the judge, "I would like to call upon Mr. Philip Foxley as witness for the defense."

Whereupon the judge nodded assent.

"Wonder what Foxley has to do with this business?" queried Moxon of The News, as Foxley, in obedience to the judge's permission, ascended the stand. Finley of The Banner and Johnson of The Times, just as wise as he, could only shake their heads in dubiety.

Mr. Bright addressed Foxley. "You are a reporter, I understand, Mr. Foxley?"

"Yes."

"And you have been in constant touch with the case known as the Forman mystery since the night of the tragedy?"

Again Foxley nodded assent.

"As police reporter of The Mail I was assigned to the story on the night of the tragedy," he began. "I immediately went to headquarters, where I met Detective Barton and Waller, who had just returned from the Forman home. There I was shown the note picked up on the floor of the sitting-room where Miss Forman was found. To my surprise I recognized the handwriting as that of Rupert Morden, a friend, and who now stands in the dock charged with Ethel Forman's murder."

"The next morning I accompanied the detectives to the discovery of the body in the ravine a hat belonging to Rupert Morden was found among some bushes. I instantly divined that the discovery of the body and the discovery of the hat were one and the same thing. I hurried away to Morden's home, intending to warn him of the danger menacing him. But I found him missing. He had come in early on the morning following the tragedy, partaken of breakfast, read the morning paper, which contained the account of the Forman case, and gone out, saying nothing to his mother and sister as to where he had been the night before or whether he was bound. I never saw him again until the day he surrendered himself to the police."

"The case interested me, but I had no intention of investigating it until the day Dr. Warrenner's car was recovered and brought back to the city. While it was standing in the courtyard of the city hall I happened to come around. While examining it I found among the cushions the return half of a railway ticket. It was for a ticket to Bellingham. I immediately recalled that Dr. Warrenner's motor car had been stolen on the night Miss Forman was shot, and instantly jumped to the conclusion that the thief was none other than the man who had killed the girl. So I made enquiries at the Leaside railway station, and learned that the night of the tragedy a man had bought a single ticket for Bellingham. The station agent described the man as tall and thin, and said that he had left his boarding-house the ten-ten local to his destination."

"Accordingly I went to Boswell, Enquirer, the station agent, and there led to the discovery that on the morning of the day that Ethel Forman died Peter Walton, a member of a well-known family, had purchased a return ticket to Bellingham. I followed this with further enquiries at the Balmbridge home, and of certain people in the village. I learned that Walton had been seen driving in the direction of Trenton on the morning after the tragedy. At Trenton I was told that Walton had purchased a single ticket for Toronto."

"At Toronto I lost the trail. So I returned to Boswell and camped on the Balmbridge doorstep, as it were, surmising that it would not be long before Walton would communicate his whereabouts to his people. For days I examined every piece of outgoing mail from the Balmbridge home, until one day I found the information I sought. Acting upon this information I returned to Toronto with two headquarters men, only to find Walton had flown. He had left his boarding-house following the visit of a young woman the day before. From the description furnished by the landlady of the house, we recognized the woman as Edith Forman."

"While in Toronto Miss Forman was taken ill and removed to the hospital. When she was fit to talk we visited her in the hope of inducing her to tell us the whereabouts of Walton. But she absolutely refused; in fact, she died the day of the trial drawing near. Detectives Barton and Waller returned to town, leaving me to ferret a little further. I did not do so, for the fact that Walton, sick of the hounding to which he was being subjected, surrendered himself to the Toronto authorities, was a fact which I would not have been able to state his side of the case than I."

IMPERIAL EXCHANGE RATE.

London, April 5.—On the assumption that some form of imperial preference will be Great Britain's policy in the near future a prominent banking authority suggests the establishment of a fixed uniform rate of exchange within the empire, which he asserts would not hamper manufacturers, merchants or producers when making contracts, and which would not place them at a disadvantage when receiving cash payments of goods by reason of loss in exchange.
