The dearest corner in our home-

Where rich old heirlooms, queer With Time, are stowed away?

Where ancient gods of good and grace Smile from the dusk and dim— Venus and Buddah's double face— Like spectres dark and grim ?

The dearest corner ! Can you guess

The descret corner? Can you guess: Where furebears proudly stare. From days that died long, long ago. To days that are young and fair, is this the dearest corner? An! Think you I choose this spot? (I love the dear old people all;) And yet, I choose it not.

The dearest corner ! Do I seek
The little flower hill
the rives climb the trellis tree
And tumble from the sill !
Where cyclids turn their pouting lips
Link the bases and

Up to the lover sun?
Think you I love this corner best?
Or choose this shining one

The dearest corner? Not for gifts
Of gold, and time, and space
I choose a cozy little spot
And bless the preclose place;
To love's pwn gift I softly steal.
And watch, and pray and peep
And bending o'er the cradle, kiss
My little babe, asleep!

y. "And no moon!" "How can you find your way?" asked Ars. Bridges, to whom this was a mortally dangerous journey.

"Oh, it's quite simple! If you don't bump against a tree or fall into the creek you may be quite sure you're on the trail," laughed Ross.

Mrs. Redfield knew the true reason for his coming and was not at all Bank.

The Stock Transfer Book will be closed from the 16th to the 30th proximal inclusive. Lee accepted innocently, but as the young people left the room Mrs. Enderby looked at her hostess with significant glance. "There's the lady Ros rode down to meet. Who is she?"
"Her, mother is that dreadful old creature that keeps the Wetherford ho-tel in Roaring Fork."
"No!" exclaimed Mrs. Enderby.
"Yes; Lee Virginia is Lize Wether-ford's daughter.' "But the girl is charming." "I cannot understand it. Hugh came home a week or so ago full of her praise"— And at this point her voice dropped lower, and the other drew closer.

CHAPTER VIII. THE CASE OF LEE VIRGINIA AND ROSS W EE and Ross stood in silence on the Redfield veranda. There was no moon, and the mountains rose darkly, a sheer wall at the end of the garden, their tops cutting into the starry sky with a dull edge, over which a dim white cone peered. "That snow peak is Wolftooth and thirty miles from been and at the head thirty miles from here and at the head of my 'beat,'" said the ranger after of my 'beat,'" said the ranger after a pause as they leaned against the railing and tooked away to the south. "I go up that cldge which you see faintly at the left of the main canyon and through that deep notch which is above timber line."
The chi's cyes widened with a set the big, silent, dark world he indicated. "Aren't you afraid to start out on such a trip alone—I mean, don't you dread it?"
"I'll be sorry to start back, yes, but not because of the dark. I've enjoyed not because of the dark. I've enjoyed my visit here so much it will be hard to say good night."

"It seems strange to me that you should prefer this wild country to Eng-land." "Do you like the east better than the west?"
"In some ways; but, then, you see, I

"In some ways; but, then, you see, I was born out here."

"Bo was I—I mean to say I was regenerated out here. The truth is I was a good deal of a scapegrace when I left England. I was always for hunting and horses, and naturally I came directly to the wild west country, and here I've been ever since. I've had my turn at each phase of it—cowpuncher, soldier, rough rider and finally forest ranger. I reckon I've found my job at last?"

"Do you like it so much?"

"At the present time I am perfectly contented. I'm associated now with a country that will never yield to the plow. Yes, I like my work. I love the forests and the streams. I wish I might show them to you. You don't know how beautiful parks in the world are commonplace to what I can show you.

The Great Conservation Novel "I'd like it above everything," she responded fervently. Then her voice changed. "But all depends on my BY HAMLIN GARLAND. Copyright, 1910, by Hamlin Garland.

It hart him to hear her call Eliza. Wetherford mother. He wanted to forget her origin for the moment. He was not in love with her-far from it But she was so alluring, and the proprietress of the Wetherford House was not nice, and that made one doubt the daughter.

Stip broke the silence. "It seems dreadfully dark and mysterious up there." She indicated his path, "It isn't as bad as it looks. There is tle owners she was better able to fol-low the discussion. Bridges was hearfily on the side of law and order, for he wished to boom the state (being a good trall, and my pony knows it as well as I do. I enjoy riding by night." a heavy owner in a town site, but he objected to Reddeld's ideas of "bot-tling up the resources of the state."
"But we're not." reforted Reddeld; "we're merely defending them against things, are there not?"
"Not as much as I wish there were."
"Why do you say that?"
"I hate to see all the wild life killed those who would monopolize them. We believe in their fullest use, but we

"I hate to see all the wild life killed off. Some day all these forests will have game refuges like the Yellowstons National park. They are common each year to have greater and greater value to the people of the plains. They are playgrounds, like the Alpa. If I should ever settle down to a home it would be in a canyon like this, with a great peak at my front doer." Mrs. Redfield ruse as soon as the cof-fee came on. "You gentlemen seem you to fight it out alone. I'm sure you'll all agree with Hugh in the end. Like General Grant, he's a very ob-stinate man."

No sconer were they seated in the big living room than Mrs. Enderby be-gan to relate comical stories of her household. Her cats had fits and ran tone of sadness with which we con-front the perfect night, the perfect flower, the flawless landscape, "It is both grand and peaceful."

Doth grand and peaceful."

This tone of sadness pleased him. It showed her depth of perception, and he reflected that she had not uttered a vacuous or silly phrase since their first meeting. "She is capable of great development." he thought Aloud he said: "You are a strange mingling of east and west. Do you realize it?" up the wall. Her dogs were forever getting quilled by reason of foolish attacks upon porcupines, or else they came home so reminiscent of skunks that they all but smothered the cook. "In what way?" she asked, feeling omething ardent in his tone, "You typify to me at this moment I think of all these irruptions and dis-tractions England's order and routine seem heavenly. But Charley finds all are, derived from the lawless west, yet taking on the culture and restraint of the east so readily that you seem not in the least related to"-He checked himself at this point, and she said, "My mother is not as claim that the ranch is paying. I tell him there's an error in his bookkeeping somewhere, but he assures me that his receipts exceeded his expenditures last year, which is quite too incredible. You've no idea how high wages are and how little we raise." rough as she seems, Mr. Cavanagh."

"She must be more of the woman than appears or she could not have borne such a daughter. But do you feel your relationship to her? Tell me honestly, for you interest me." "Oh, yes, I have," laughed Mrs. Red-field. "And my cat had a fit too. Hugh says it's the high altitude. I tell him

"I didn't at first, but I do now. I begin to understand her, and, besides, I feel in myself certain things that are in her, though I think I am more like the Wetherfords. My father's family home was in Maryland."

so much laughter I'm coming in. We're all so insufferably political out here, and, besides, I came to see the ladies, and I can stay only a few minutes Ross could have talked on all night, so alluring was the girl's dimly seen yet warmly felt figure at his side, but a sense of danger and a knowledge that he should be riding led him at last to say: "It is getting chill. We "You're not going back tonight?" exclaimed his hostess,
"I must be on my own precinct by laylight," he replied. "The supervisor must go in, but before we do so let me say how much I've enjoyed seeing you again. I hope the doctor will make faorable report on your mother's case You'll write me the result of the examination, won't you?" "Thirty," corrected Ross. "But what oes that matter when I'm in the com-

"And now he's going to ride all the They were standing very near to each other at the moment, and the ranger, made very sensitive to woman's charm by his ionely life, shook with newly created love of her. A suspicion, a hope, that beneath her cul-tivated manner lay the passionate na-ture of her mother gave an added force to his desire. He was sorely tempte to touch her, to test her, but her sweet voice, a little conscious of evil, calmed him. She .bina

> "I hope to persuade my mother t leave the Forks. All the best people there see, against us. Some of them have seen very cruel to her and to me, and, Natdes, I despise and fear the men who come to our table." "You must not exchange words with them," he all but commanded. "Be-ware of Gregg; he is a vile lot. Do not trust him for an instant. Do not permit any of those loafers to talk with you, for if you do they will go away to defame you. I know them. They are unspeakably vile. It makes me angry to think that Gregg and his like have the right to speak to you every day, while I can see you only at long intervals. I wish my station were not so far away. But I'll ride down as often as my duties will permit, and you must let me know how things go. And if any of those fellows persecute you you'll tell me, won't you? I wish you'd ook upon me as your big brother. Will you do that?" His voice entreated, and as she remained silent he con-tinued: "Roaring Fork is one of the worst towns in the state, and a girl like you needs some one as a protector.

I don't know just how to put it so that you will not misunderstand me. that you will not misunderstand me, but, you see, I protect the forest, the streams and the game, I help the eetier in time of trouble, I am a kind of all round big brother to everybody who needs help in the forest. In fact, I'm paid for protecting things that can't protect themselves, and so"—here he tried to lend his voice the accent of humor—"why shouldn't I be the protector of a girl like you, alone—worse than alone—in this little cow town?"

She remained dumb at one or two points where he clearly hoped for a word, and she was unable to thank word, and she was unable to thank him when he had finished. In this silence a curious constriction came into his throat. It was almost as if he had put his passion into definite words, and as the light fell upon her he per ecived that her bosom was heaving

"I am lonely," she faltered out at last—"horribly lonely. And I know now how people feel toward my mother, and it hurts me—it all hurts me. But I'm going to stay and help her"—She paused to recover her voice. "And you do seem different. I—I trust you!" "I'm giad you understand me, and you will let me know if I can help you, won't won!"

you, won't you?"
"Yes," she answered simply.
"Good night," he said, extending his hand.

She placed her palm to his quite frankly, but the touch of it made further speech at the moment impossible. They went in with such telltale faces that even Redfield wondered what had passed between them.
