THE SURRENDER'S EFFECT.

While the fall of Port Arthur will be inspiring to the Japanese and will have a depressing influence upon the Russians, though probably not to a corresponding extent, it is improbable that it will have any immediate effect upon the general prosecution of the war or that it will bring peace visibly nearer. The surrender will not come as a shock to Russia, for hope must have been given up months ago when Kuropatkin's attempt to release the garrison failed, and what moral effect the loss of a great fortress might have is balanced partially at least, by An Englishman Resents Dr. Hannay's and always cunning. the memory of the splendid heroism of the defending general and his soldiers, who successfully resisted overwhelm ing odds until it became unmistakwould be senseless suicide.
