child named Elizabeth McAvoy, aged three years, and daughter of Mr. D. McAvoy strayed from her father's residence at the 'Three Mile House' and was not misse until brought home dead twenty minut later. Her body had been found floating on the surface of the Colebrook stream by a man named John Quirk, who at once carried it to the house, where every effort was made to restore life, but in vain. Dr. McLaren was sent for, but on his arrival could render no assistance. An inquest was held by Coroner Earle this morning and a verdict of accidental drowning returned. The child was a bright and promising little girl, and its loss is a severe affliction to its parents.

Proverbs of the People. The lecture of the Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown at the Institute last evening was attended by an audience which, in comparison with those present at the free services on Sunday, was quite small, only about 400 persons being present. The chair was gregated seventee ment also bought cupied by His Honor Governor Wilmot, who having missed the train which was to have conveyed him to Coverdale to the opening of the Albert Railway, was thus enabled to be present, and preside at the lecture of the distinguished divine.

the clergy; the legal and medical professions and the occupations of every day life, such as those of the miller and blacksmith. Some of the best illustrations of these were given and some explanations offered which must have been new to very many of the audience. For instance, all had heard said of a shiftless iperson, "He will never set the Thames on fire," and had supposed of course the river Thames was meant. This was a stupid and incongruous saying, but when it was known that "temse" was a species of seive used in a mill and might by the friction caused by hard work take fire, the idea that a lazy person would "Never set the temse on fire" was sufficiently plain The lecturer also in justice to the Knights of the shears, explained that the provent that" a tailor is the ninth part of a man' was another misconstruction of a word.

It was at one time the custom in England on the death of a child to toll the bell thrise, for a woman six times, and for a man nine times. One stroke or "teller" CAMERON was therefore said to be the minth part of a man, and the "tailor" had no connection with the matter. The lecturer censured sept28 the proverbs too common in the commer world regarding the rescality of mankind, and though this objection had been taken by some to the Bible, yet that book never forgot we were men and spoke of us truly as we were and are. Other humorous nroverbs contained much plain truth, such as "steal a pig and give the trotters in common use in this country, and said he had seen more ingenious specimens of putting during a brief stay in America than in a whole lifetime in Great Britain. He further mentioned the real philosophy in the Spanish proverb of 'Welcome

To Females, om the peculiar affections that attend them when they are arriving at maturity, and also at the decline or "change of life," they are the best remedy and assistant that can be used.
