

I took from the brake the dear innocent train,
 Strait, enraptur'd, to Phillis flew over the plain;
 The maid was directing the vine o'er her bow'r
 To shield from the sun, or to keep off the show'r;
 The moment she saw me, the boon she confess'd,
 And with rapture accepted the Bullfinch's nest;
 (How strange the transaction) she look'd on the young,

Her eye drop'd a tear, pity flow'd from her tongue;
 Ah! Damon she cry'd, with a heart piercing sigh,
 'Twould grieve me to death if these charmers should die;
 Though great should my care be to rear up the nest,
 The parent (my Damon) must cherish them best.
 I kiss'd her for this, and commended the maid,
 That instant we ran with the nest to shade; That
