Tried to Save Rees

Major Frank Morris, Toronto, struggled to save his beloved chief in the cold water miles off Father Point with a dense fog hiding everything from view, but not sufficiently dense to hold back from his ears the dying shrieks, the last appeals for help sent up by his beloved comrades, fighting like himself against an almost certain death, but all to no purpose, for Commissioner David Rees in the end slipped from his hold and vanished be-

Efforts Fruttless

Major Morris swam to the Commissioner and, partly supporting him on his back, swam slowly in the semidarkness, hoping all the while that a boat would come to their aid. Many minutes passed, and no help came, and though the Major was weakening fast, he kept to his self-chosen task ly the chief of the Salvation forces in Canada then slid from the back of his faithful officer and sank from view.
