NOTICE.
When a newspaper offers its advertising space at a nominal figure, it is a practical admission of "no circulation." THE KLONDIKE NUGGET asks a good figure for its space and in justification thereof guarantees to its advertisers a paid circulation far in excess of any other paper published between Dawson and the North Pole.

INTERRUPTIONS OF BUSINESS.

Whether as a result of the warfare of strikers or of the elements, mails from the east are not arriving with conspicuous regularity just now. Probably, says the Victoria Times, it is a combination of the two that is playing the mischief. There is no apparent reason why the letters should not have been sent around by the Crow's Nest Southern loop as was done on a former occasion when washouts occurred. No doubt the railway people are doing their utmost to facilitate transportation of all kinds and there are insurmountable obstacles in the way of the mails would have arrived as usual. But the interruption of business emphasises the interest the public has in these disputes between capital and labor. The railway company has been granted important franchises on the understanding that it shall discharge with regularity its duty as the medium through which great commercial transactions are possible. A misunderstanding with its employes arises, they refuse to work and do all in their power to prevent others from taking their places. Both parties to the dispute are inflexible in their determination not to yield. The strikers were probably ill advised or the other employees of the road would hardly refuse them sympathy, not to mention encouragement, material or verbal. But it would not be safe to dogmatise on that point, for even in the ranks of labor there exist the incomprehensible and nonsensical prejudices which separate men into classes. "Skilled" workmen are known to have refused to have dealings with their "unskilled" brethren. Naturally the company is not disposed to yield in a matter which will add $500,000 per annum to its wage bill if it can avoid it. So war is declared, and, as usual, the non-combatants suffer in common with the belligerents. Would it not be in the interest of the country generally if a tribunal were created to which such disputes could be referred? Capitalists do not favor such a course, probably because they believe the demands of workmen would be incessant and the work of the court continuous. Workingmen say they will refuse to give up their independence and go to work on the order of any authority. You can lead a man up to the bench or carry him out and plant him upon his railway section, but you can't make him work. No doubt there is something in both contentions; but in these of rapid communications and intricate relationship no man can live entirely for himself. The community has rights as well as the individual. A court of arbitration could pronounce upon the merits of an industrial dispute and public opinion would enforce its decision. Capital would be compelled to acquiesce and if labor refused neither odium nor compulsion would prevent those who were eager for a chance to work from filling up the vacancies.

Until some such methods be adopted we may expect disputes and disturbances to be continually arising. It is not the nature of man to be satisfied, that is, not the species bred where freedom reigns. The liberty he enjoys broadens his aspirations and it may be made him a trifle unreasonable. Unless machinery be provided to impose upon him a measure of restraint he may drive business to some extent to lands where associations and unions are unknown. Trade has been diverted from one country to another through strikes. Means of communication are so easy and cheap these days that all nations are near neighbors and the cost of transportation affects but slightly the prices of goods.

As was the case with the San Francisco newspapers and Theodore Durant, the Seattle Times has started in to have John Considine hung for killing Meredith. The Times is now saying everything it can good of Meredith and everything bad of Considine. The deplorable feature of the whole business seems to be that there is very little good to be said either of the slayer or the slain. A bet of 10 to 1 that Considine will not hang, on this charge at least, is a good one. It looks as though he took advantage of Meredith and killed him after he was partly disarmed and dazed, but the killer had a buckshot in his own neck and was probably slightly dazed himself.

The Sun's advertiser becomes more quaint in his style of humor every day. In his advertisement in this paper today he asks people to subscribe to the Weekly Sun Ye gods! The late predictions of the Nugget that the B. Y. N. Co. would have no use for the majority of its boats during the remainder of the season is verified today in the report that several of its steamers are being laid up. As the company, however, is bound by contract to carry the royal and U. S. mails to and from Dawson, it is not probable that all the B. Y. N. steamers will be taken off the route.

King Edward's horse, "Diamond Jubilee," has just won for his owner stakes amounting to $50,000. Not a bad pot for even a king to win.

There is no cessation in the work of building in Dawson, the class of structures going up being superior to that of any previous year.

Coronation Proclamation.
London, June 28.—The royal proclamation announcing that the coronation of King Edward is to take place in June next, the exact date not being determined upon, was read this morning at St. James' palace, Temple Bar, and the Royal Exchange, with all the quaint mediaeval scenes which marked the occasion of the proclamation of the accession of the king.

Today's ceremonial was unheralded, so the crush was not so great as on the previous occasions, but crowds gathered quickly from all directions and thronged the points at which the announcement was read. At St. James' palace, from the purple draped balcony of the palace the Norey King of Arms (William Henry Weldon), in a brilliant uniform, accompanied by the heralds and pursuivants, in gorgeous tabards and numerous state officials, read the proclamation. At the appointed four state trumpeters, lavishly adorned in gold embroidered tunics, appeared in front of the balcony. By their side stood the Norey King of Arms, flanked by two royal maces bearing gold mace and surrounded by the blue mantle.

In addition were several other officials, all in their full official regalia, and the Earl Marshal (the Duke of Norfolk), the Lord Stewart (the Earl of Pembroke), the Lord Chamberlain (the Earl of Clarendon) and others.

The trumpeters sounded a protracted fanfare and then the Norey King of Arms bared his head and read the proclamation in a clear voice, which must have been audible to the royal party occupying a stand on the grounds of Marlborough House, facing the balcony of the palace. King Edward, who wore an admiral's uniform, Queen Alexandra and others of the royal party watched the ceremony with the greatest interest, the king using field glasses to obtain a clearer view.

As the Norey King of Arms concluded with the words, "God Save the King," the trumpeters again sounded a fanfare, the king in the meantime standing at the salute.

A procession was then formed. Led by a detachment of the Horse Guards, five royal carriages, containing the heralds, pursuivants and other officers, proceeded to Temple Bar and the Royal Exchange, where the formalities, less picturesque, perhaps, were repeated.

The Lord Mayor (Frank Green) and the sheriffs met the procession at Temple Bar.

Railway Extension.

Montreal, June 27.—President Shaughnessy, of the C. P. R., in answer to an inquiry as to the construction work in Manitoba proposed by the company during the coming year, said that there seemed to be great anxiety both on the part of the Dominion and provincial governments for the construction of an extension of the Waskada branch, and that the Dominion government at the instance of Hon. Mr. Sifton had offered a Dominion subsidy of $3,300,000 per mile.

Mr. Roblin, premier of Manitoba, also considers it of the greatest importance that a railway should be built from some point in the vicinity of Brandon westerly or northwesterly to serve the settlers who live north of the Assinaboine river, but who are too far from the Great Northwest Central line. He is most anxious also that some extensions be made to the Snow Lake and McGregor branches, and as a provincial subsidy is promised, in view of the public demand for these extensions, the company has undertaken to construct them, and Mr. Shaughnessy expressed the hope, and stated that it was the intention, unless prevented by unforeseen obstacles, that they would be completed during the current season.

Taken at His Word.

The chance for an argument between the loquacious barber and a somewhat impecunious patron resulted from a very simple remark which the tonsorial artist intended to be funny.

"Would you like a shave without pain?" he inquired as he jammed his victim down into the depths of the newly patented chair.

"Why, certainly, I'll take all that kind you can give me," responded the customer, smiling slyly to himself.

During the operation the glib tongued razor wielder entertained his helpless patron with all manner of small talk about the baseball situation, the ripper bills and other live topics of the day, throwing out an occasional suggestion as to the advisability of a shampoo and the benefit of hair singeing, with eloquent side remarks as to the virtue of Leithhead's hair tonic and kindred preparations that are always so inimitably placed before the man in the chair.

When he had been shaved, and dusted by the porter, the wearied customer started toward the door without offering to pay. The barber, thinking it was a case of absentmindedness, halted him with "Oh, Mr. Blank, didn't you—oh—forget something?"

"I believe not," said Blank innocently. "Well, do you want me to charge that shave?"

"Why, what are you talking about?" responded Blank. "Didn't you ask me when I sat down if I wanted a shave without pain? Well, I took you at your word, and I'm very much obliged for the favor."

The factiously inclined barber tried to explain that he meant a painless shave, but he was compelled to admit the shave was on him, and as he cashed up a check to the "head push" he remarked:

"There are lots of little 'skin games' in this business. This experience puts me in mind of the chap who asked me how much I would charge for shaving one side of his face.

"Five cents," I replied unsuspectingly.

"Well, I'll have the out-side shaved," was the reply, and he got a shave for half price."—Detroit Free Press.

It Was Too Much for Him.

An old negro met him on the highway and asked him for some tobacco. Receiving it, the old man bowed and said:

"Thanky, cap'n!"

A little farther on the way another negro asked the same favor, and this time it was:

"Thanky kunnel!"

And the climax was reached when still another greeted him with:

"May de Lawd bless you, governor!"

Now, was it any wonder that that man went straight home and seriously debated the question of running for office at the first opportunity?—Atlanta Constitution.
