The Sands O' Dee

The Welsh call the Dee Dyfrdwy. This is mentioned in passing, because the Dee in its origin, and in part of its course, is a Welsh River, and its Welsh name should in any mention of the river, be duly recorded. This name need not, however, enter further into anything that may be said about it. Anyone who knows the Dee well thinks ever gratefully, of course, of its upper reaches, of the beautiful Lake Bala, where it takes its rise; of the wonderful Vale of Llangollen, and of the river's journey, thirty miles or more down to Overton, through the narrow valley, inclosed on the south by the steep lower slopes of the Berwyn Mountains and on the north by a series of lesser hills running away to the sea. If he is an Englishman, however, he thinks of it firmly as the Dee, all the way.

Then he will remember it lower down, when it has ceased the tumbling and rushing and rock-dodging habits of its Welsh days and has become a gracious, placid stream which flows, rich, brown and clear, under the great trees of Eton Park, past the red city walls of old Chester, past the historic woods of Hawarden, and so on to the famous sands. Now, on a first view, whether the day be fair or dull, there is little about the sands O' Dee that one should desire them. Viewed from the Cheshire side, there is of course the grand prospects of the Welsh coast, with its wooded hills and distant mountains, but lying in between, when the tide is out, there is just one vast stretch of wet, grey sand, through the midst of which meanders aimlessly the thin thread of the river. Such is the view, for instance, gained from the heights above Holyake, just a great gray waste, with here and there a gaunt tide-washed pile sticking up crookedly out of the sand with festoons of seaweed about its feet, and flapping idly in the breeze. About a mile from the Cheshire shore is the little island of Hilbrae, with its solitary white house, but beyond this, there is nothing in all that 70 square miles of immensity but sand and sea gulls.

Then suddenly the tide turns, and the daily repeated miracle begins. The water rushes in like a mill race. Shallow channels become filled. One minute islands, peninsulas, grotesque promontories are being formed in all directions, the next, they are blotted out in a flood of water. All the time the narrow thread of the river seems to be expending by leaps and bounds and so the water comes steadily on, until, in an incredibly short space of time, it has flooded the whole vast estuary, and is washing the sand dunes of the Cheshire coast and the pebbles on the shore of Wales five miles away. It is then, of course, when sands O' Dee are covered, that most people would acclaim the prospect at its best; but those who lived with these strange wastes any length of time, and have seen them in all their varying moods, learn to love them. Summer or winter, there is no place in all England where the sunsets are more wonderful, and it was to Holyake, overlooking the famous sands, that Turner, the great painter of sunsets, resorted to do much of his work. And to see the sunset at its best, the tide must be out, and the waste must be wet, and the dull red glare from the west must light up a thousand pools of water in a wilderness of sand. Then of course there is the moonlight view, when the moon casts in silver what the sun a few hours before had cast in red and gold, and the lights on the far-away Welsh coast twinkle and twinkle again, like so many groups of stars. So it was anyway, in the day before the war. Here, indeed, is the only reminder of the war amidst these silent stretches of land sea and sky. It is specially noticeable, perhaps, just now in the long summer evenings. No longer do lights flash out suddenly from the distant shore of Wales, as the half darkness of the Summer night at last takes possession. Nowadays, the moon alone does all the lighting there is to be done at night over the sands O' Dee as over the rest of the country. — Christian Science Monitor.

SEVERE ELECTRICAL STORM AT WINDSOR

Three Barns Struck by Lightning and Destroyed, Together With Four Horses and Large Quantity of Hay

WINDSOR, Aug. 3.—Windsor was visited by a very severe electrical storm last night, at least three barns being struck by lightning and burned to the ground. Two barns belonging to A. L. Redden, at Martoch, were destroyed, together with three horses and about fifty tons of hay, all harness and farm implements. The furniture was removed from the house, but the building was saved from the flames.

A large barn at the Mantua farm, the largest farm in the province, on the Avondale road, was struck and destroyed together with one horse and a quantity of hay. The farm is owned by Thomas Mounce, who resides at Avondale.

A. Renoyds, the superintendent, resides on the farm.

Memorial Service For 4 Heroes
For Four Heroes

Berwick, July 31.—A memorial service was held in the Baptist church in Morristown, Kings Co., on Sunday afternoon in memory of four of its young men, who had made the supreme sacrifice and given their lives for their country; they were Vernon S. Wilson, Philip Beals, both of the 85th Dana Felch, of the 219th and Erwin Bartheaux, of the 25th.

The church was packed to the doors with people who had come from the surrounding districts to take in the solemn and impressive exercises, the pulpit and communion rail were banked with flowers. Rev. G. P. Raymond, a former pastor delivered a magnificent and touching address in which he touched upon the lives of the departed young men. Maj. Rev. Dr. Cutten followed and spoke on soldier's life in the great struggle. The music was of high order and was under the leadership of Mrs. R. N. Clark, of Berwick. Solos were given by R. N. Clark, F. S. Bennett and Miss Minerva Hutchinson also of Berwick. It was a service that will be long remembered in the community.

Many War Prisoners Escape From Russia

Petrograd, Aug. 1.—The notable growth in the number of enemy war prisoners escaping from Russia since the revolution is engaging the attention of the military authorities. According to published data, from the beginning of the war until March a total of 5,350 escapes had been registered, whereas during March 735 managed to get away, in April 2,518 and in May more than 3,000 escaped.
