Two years ago I suffered from a severe cold which settled on my lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given it to my children, and consider it

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposure, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pain in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

Labor and Love.

A THRILLING TALE OF THE EARLY DAYS OF LABOR STRIKES IN THE WEST.

Farnham at this address the last speaker said, "Can you tell me what all this means? You don't seem to be a murderer. Are you horse-thief?" "Nothing of the kind," said the man. "We are Reformers."

Farnham gazed at him with amazement. He was a dirty looking man, young and snappy, with long and oily hair and threadbare clothes, shiny and untidy. His eyes were red and furtive, and he had a trick of passing his hand over his mouth while he spoke. His mates stood around him, listening reverently to the conversation. They seemed of the lower class of laboring men. Their appearance was so grotesque, in connection with the lofty title their chief had given them, that Farnham could not help smiling, in spite of his anger.

"What is your special line of reform?" he asked, "spelling, or civil service?" "We are Labor Reformers," said the spokesman. "We represent the toiling millions against the bloated capitalists and grinding monopolies; we believe that man is better."

"Yes, no doubt," interrupted Farnham; "but how are you going to help the toiling millions by stopping my horse on the highway?"

"We were holding a meeting which was kept secret for reasons satisfactory to ourselves. These two gentlemen were posted here to keep out intruders from the lodge. If you had 'spoke civil' to them, there would have been no harm done. None will be done now if you want to go."

Farnham at once mounted his horse. "I would take it as a great favor," he said, "if you would give me your name and that of the gentleman with the pistol. Where is he, by the way?"

"The man they called Bowersox had disappeared from the group around the spokesman. Farnham turned and saw him a little distance away directly behind him. He had reposed himself of his pistol and held it cocked in his right hand. "What do you want of our names?" the spokesman asked.

"I would like to see you," said Farnham. "It occurred to me that the man who was posted here to keep out intruders from the lodge, if you had 'spoke civil' to them, there would have been no harm done. None will be done now if you want to go."

"Brother Bots has delivered a splendid address on the Religion of Nature, and he couldn't have had a better hall than the Canopy to give it under," said Farnham. "And now, gentlemen, we'd better get back our own way."

As Farnham rode home he was not much puzzled by his adventure in the woods. He remembered having, longed, when he was a child of ten, to a weird and mysterious confraternity called "Early Druids," which met in the depths of groves, with ill-defined purposes, and devoted the hours of meeting principally to the consumption of confectionery. He had heard for the few past months of the existence of secret organizations of working-men—wholly outside of the trades-unions and unconnected with them—and guessed at once that he had disturbed a lodge of one of these clubs. His resentment did not last very long at the treatment to which he had been subjected, but still he thought it was not a matter of just to have the roads obstructed by ruffians with theories in their heads and revolvers in their hands, neither of which they knew how to use. He therefore promised himself to consult with the chief of police the next morning in regard to the matter.

As he rode along, thinking of the occurrence, he was dimly conscious of a pleasant suggestion in something he had seen among the hazel brush, and searching tensely in his recollection of the affair, it is all at once occurred to him that among the faces of the men who came out of the thicket in the scuffle, was that of the blonde-haired, blue-eyed young carpenter who had been at work in his library the day Mrs. Belding and Alice lunched with him. He was pleased to find that the pleasant association led him to memories of his love, but for a moment a cloud passed over him at the thought of so frank and hearty a fellow and such a good workman being in such company. "I must see if I cannot get him out of it," he said to himself, and then reverted again to thoughts of Alice.

What can be more disagreeable than to sit in a room with a person that has catarrh, and has to keep coughing and clearing his throat? Such persons are always to be pined if they try to cure themselves and fail. But if they get Dr. Say's Catarrh Remedy they need be no failures.
