THE FARMERS' COLUMN.

Something of Interest For the Men Who Till the Soil.

While winter dairying is slowly increasing it requires so much skill and careful management, and such a great change in the common methods of the farm, that while it is the most profitable part of dairy farming, it is not likely, for some years yet, to be sufficiently practiced to fully supply the demand for butter in the winter. Thus the summer dairyman may still find it profitable to pack the fall made butter for winter sale. And indeed, he may do this with advantage as well as safety, for when the best quality of butter is packed in the best manner, it will improve during the keeping from the fall until winter, and be really more desirable than the ordinary winter made article. This is due to the fact that by the slow ripening in the package during storage in a cool, clean place, and in sweet, air-tight casks, there is slow internal change going on in the butter by which its finest flavor is developed, and, as with fruits, so the butter is greatly improved by what may truly be called in both cases the process of ripening. Two things are to be considered in this subject. In one way, however, promising that the butter is of the best quality, as it easily may be when it is made from the sweet, fresh fall grass, equal in every respect to the fresh spring pasture. The first thing in the process is the ripening, and second, the manner of packing the butter.

The best package for this purpose is a new white pail, made of sound timber, free of knots and blemishes, half an inch thick, well jointed, and perfectly seasoned. This pail holds fifty pounds. White spruce is the next best material, and is quite as free from any objectionable odor or taste given to the butter. The pail is prepared by a thorough cleaning in pure water. It should be soaked for at least twenty-four hours in water, and then filled with brine. This is done so that it may stay under the brine twenty-four hours before the butter is packed. The pail being ready, the butter is packed as soon as it has been finished at the second working, the date is stamped thereon, and is salted in the usual manner, one cask to the pound of butter, of the very purest and finest ground salt. It is worked as dry as can be. The pail being emptied of the brine, is dusted all over the inside with the salt, and the butter is put in only so much as will make a layer of four inches. This is compactly pressed down by a maple press, made like a common potato masher, so that all the moisture is pressed out and drained off. If in this moisture there is any odor or shade of milk, the butter has not been made as well as it should be, and will not come out in perfect condition. No shade of milk is to be permitted in the butter for this use, but any moisture that drains from it should be as clear as the dew on the morning grass. Then the butter thus put in is lightly dusted with salt, and another layer is put in in the same manner, until the pail is filled to a quarter of an inch of the edge of the pail.

If the butter is not sufficient for a full pail, it is packed as far as it can be and covered with salt, and the pail is put away until the next churning, being kept covered with a clean towel. Then the next churning is packed in the same manner until the pail is filled as mentioned, when the butter is covered with a piece of good, heavy shirting cloth, well washed in boiling water and steeped in brine, with the pail. It is cut half an inch larger than the outer edge of the pail. It is pressed down on the butter to exclude all air, a little salt sprinkled deep in her heat is sprinkled on the edge of the pail; this salt is well pressed down and is covered with a sheet of parchment paper, which is printed the name of the butter maker and the dairy, and any handsome device that may be used as a trade-mark. This is in justice to the person who will sell the butter, and to make a fine article of butter. The cover, treated as the pail has been, is then securely fastened down and the pail is stored in a cool, clean, sweet cellar where the air is dry. Butter so packed will be in the finest condition until May or June of the next year, and should bring the highest market rates.

SMOTHERED BY THE CAT.

It Lay on the Krantz Baby's Face as She Slept.

Sadie Krantz, the six-months-old child of Jacob Krantz, New York, was smothered to death recently. The family cat, a large black-and-white tom, curled up and went to sleep on the baby's face as she lay half buried in cushions and blankets in her carriage. When the child's mother caught the cat there, about four o'clock in the morning, the baby was dead.

Mr. Krantz, came in a few minutes after ten on the previous night and found the cat sleeping alongside the baby in the carriage, which was near the bed in his room, his wife occupying the adjoining room, and another child in the sitting-room with her after giving it a whipping. He told his wife, who was surprised that the cat should have got into baby carriage, as she had been very careful not to let it get on any of the beds.

Mr. Krantz went to bed after assuring himself that the baby was not harmed in any way. Just before he dropped to sleep he felt a warm feeling at his feet, and knew that the cat had jumped on the bed. Being very tired, he did not trouble himself to drive the animal away, as he thought he had heard stories of cats sucking children's breath, so he grabbed the animal by the neck, whipped it, and threw it into the kitchen, where it fell with a great clatter among a lot of pans. He shoved the door leading into the kitchen, and hid under the stove. The baby's face was perfectly free, and the infant breathed freely, while the cat purred. He looked at the pair a moment, thinking what a pretty sight it was, but a queer gleam in the cat's eye made him suspicious.
