MAJESTIC THEATRE

Gen. Yudenitch.

General Yudenitch, commanding the Russian forces fighting the Bolsheviks on the northern and western lines before Petrograd, is said to possess a pleasing manner, but a commanding presence. When moved to indignation his face is masklike. He prefers, on such occasions, to express himself in Russian. When pleased, he gives the visitor an impression of being an affable lion, gently purring, and he will endeavor to make himself agreeable in German or French, but is not really master of these languages.

Before the collapse of Russia as a member of the Entente, Gen. Yudenitch did brilliant work against the Turk who was remembered by Admiral Kolchak who sent the detacher of the Turks to command the corps of the north fighting the Bolsheviks.

His political problems have been as difficult as his military ones, but he has applied himself to both with considerable success. His victories have not yet been decisive, nor have his reverses been crushing, and in time, it is believed, he will rescue Petrograd from the servitude of Bolshevism.
