LADY LAURA'S RELEASE

THE STORY OF A SPOILED BEAUTY.

INTRODUCTION.

"Honestly consider I have done the best thing for both."

"If you think so, there is no more to be said," returned Mr. Sansome. "But there is one question I must ask. In making a will of such importance, one requires a clear understanding on every point. In the event of your death and the death of Miss Rooden, how is Lady Rooden to dispose of the property?"

The baronet thought for some moments, then answered:

"In that case I should lay no restrictions whatever upon it; she can dispose as she will. I have no near relatives, and, unless it should please Heaven to bless me with a son, the title, so far as I know, will become extinct at my death."

"You have nothing more to add, Sir Charles?" asked the lawyer.

"Nothing, except that as soon as you have the will drawn up, I shall be glad to sign it. It will be of my mind, and I shall feel more satisfied."

"It shall be done at once," said Mr. Sansome. "Have patience with me while I recapitulate your instructions. In the event of your death, your whole fortune and estates go intact to Lady Rooden, and she is to have full benefit of them during her life time. At her death they pass to your daughter, Angela. If I understand rightly, Lady Rooden is not to have the power to dispose anything—not an ounce of the family plate, not a picture from the gallery, not a tree from the woods."

"That is so," agreed Sir Charles.

"Her ladyship can, if she thinks proper make Miss Rooden an allowance, or if she should marry, it is in her mother's power to give her a dowry."

"Yes," said Sir Charles briefly.

"If, however, Angela Rooden should die, the property would be entirely at Lady Rooden's disposal."

"Entirely," repeated Sir Charles, his handsome face glowing with pride and generosity.

"She can bequeath it to charities, missions, or anything else she chooses?" queried Mr. Sansome.

"Yes—she will make a wise use of it," said Sir Charles.

"Those are my instructions, and I have simply to carry them out," concluded Mr. Sansome.

"That is all," said Sir Charles.

The lawyer was silent for a few moments; then, raising his head, he glanced keenly at Sir Charles.

"I cannot help it," he said—"I may forget your friendship—but I must say that yours will be the most imprudent and I will add, the most foolish will I have ever made or heard of."

Sir Charles laughed.

"An honest opinion, at least!" he remarked. "Thank you for it; but in this matter you must permit me to know best. I know what a noble, honorable woman my wife is, and I take an especial pride in showing practically how perfectly I trust her."

"Is it of any use for me to suggest that Miss Rooden ought to have an income of her own?" asked Mr. Sansome.

"Mother and daughter will have a common purse between them," answered Sir Charles.

"Forgive me once more. Suppose that Lady Rooden, as we may naturally hope, lives to a ripe old age; do you think it will be just or prudent to force Miss Rooden to be dependent all that time on her mother's bounty?"

"It will simply bind them together; it will keep their interests one," replied Sir Charles, and there was a note of impatience in his voice.

"It is a false idea," said Mr. Sansome.

"Still I will carry it out," persisted the baronet. "It is my wish and desire, and," he added, with a smile, "every man can do what he likes with his own."

"True; but no man, even with his own, ought to do that which will injure others," returned the lawyer.

"And you believe honestly that my will may injure those it is intended to benefit?" questioned Sir Charles.

"I do," replied Mr. Sansome; and the baronet was thoughtfully silent for some moments.

"Thank you for your candor; but my opinion is not in the least changed. I will take all the responsibility. When shall I call at your office to sign my will? I am really in town for that purpose."

"Will Tuesday morning suit you, Sir Charles?" asked the lawyer.

"Yes," he said; and on Tuesday, the twenty-third of April, the will which the lawyer had stigmatized as "imprudent" and "foolish" was duly signed and attested.

CHAPTER I.

A spoiled beauty—spoiled by a devotion and love such as fall to the lot of few women—Lady Rooden did not know the meaning of the word "care." She was only seventeen when Sir Charles Rooden wooed and won her; and from that time he had surrounded her with such loving care that her lot amongst women was quite exceptional.

Pain's Enemy

SLOAN'S Liniment is proclaimed the world over as being Pain's greatest enemy. Multitudes of people use and recommend it. Rheumatic aches and pains instantly obey its command and disappear. It penetrates right to the sore spot. No need of rubbing. Give it a trial. One bottle will convince you. At all druggists and dealers.

Few knew such unalloyed happiness as she enjoyed. At times a fleeting regret that she had no son to succeed her husband would come over her; but even that regret was softened when she remembered how deeply he loved their little daughter.

The Roodens of Rood Abbey had been for many generations owners of that fair and fertile domain. Like many of the old ancestral homes of England, Rood Abbey had originally been the property of a religious order; but, falling victims to the rapacity of the reigning monarch and the bigotry of the times, they had been expelled the country, their property confiscated, and house and lands were given to Guy Rooden, a court favorite, whose descendants had lived there ever since. Many parts of the old Abbey had successfully resisted the wasting hand of Time, notably the massive battlemented towers and the ponderous old entrance gates through which King, queen, and mitered abbot had often driven. Many a solemn procession had passed through these portals.

The Abbey itself was a substantial old building of gray stone, the towers of which were almost covered with ivy. It stretched its turrets round the great arched windows; it climbed to the very top of the tall towers; it clung in rich masses to the ancient walls. Rood Abbey, as seen by the light of the summer sun or by the moon's pale beams, presented a picture at once picturesque and imposing. The estate, which situated in one of the most beautiful of the Midland Counties, was singularly favored by Nature, and not the least of its charms was the bright flashing river Letr smooth and peaceful in places, spangled here and there by rustic bridges and widening in its course until it developed into the broad, deep reach in front of the Abbey itself.

Sir Charles Rooden had succeeded when quite young to the inheritance of Rood. He was one of Fortune's favorites, handsome in face and figure, with a gentle, kind, cheery manner that made him universally beloved.

What made me happy

"I was congratulating myself that I had passed the winter without catching a cold, when I got one at the beginning of last May. It was because I was run down. Being run down I had some trouble in getting rid of this cold. I was a nervous wreck. I would wake up regularly morning after morning, feeling that some terrible calamity would take place. Although we were comfortably off, I felt sure my husband was going to lose everything. The children worried me. If they made the least noise, I would get into a terrible temper. I would scold them so that I am sure they hated me. I would be mad with myself mind never to let it happen again. I would go to bed at night and begin to think and picture dreadful things which might happen to my family. I would lay awake for hours, sometimes until daylight, until I was so weak that I could scarcely raise my head. I would waken next day just as tired as when I laid down. After a while I got so that I didn't care what happened. The children annoyed me and I wouldn't have cared if they had left me for good. I felt that it was only a matter of time before I would lose my mind. I knew that my symptoms were due to a run down condition and that if I could only get something to build me up, I might be all right. I knew that there must be some good tonic but most of them made such foolish claims that I was afraid of them. Happening one day to run across a leaflet about Carnal, I was impressed with the moderate way this preparation was described, so I made up my mind I would try it. I did and today I am the happiest and healthiest woman living. I haven't a care in the world. Instead of running away from me, my children are now with me all the time. My husband tells me that my disposition is as near an angel as any human being's can be, but of course he is prejudiced. I don't believe I have a nerve in my body now."

Carnal is sold by your druggist, and if you can conscientiously say, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you any good, return the empty bottle to him and he will refund your money. 6-232
