THE BEST BEEF.

Impure Drinking Water Great Evil.

Fresh Beef Best. The beef killed at distant points and carried in refrigerators will not keep when exposed to the air. Why? Because it becomes loaded or covered with the bacteria of decay, and as soon as it gets in the warm sir, i. e., out of the chilling in the refrigerator, these germs begin their work to destroy the meat. There is then a race or atrife between the bacteria and the consumers who will eat it first. In too many cases the invisible bacteria win, and we have to eat, if we eat it, partly rotten beef. We say, eat it not, but get fresh killed. For any policy which separates or destroys docal interest is wrong. The beef monopoly has done this. The foundations of this trade are rotten. Home production is ruined. The butchers are made slaves and condemned serfs. Local trade or exchange is wiped out. How long will it be before the trades-people in our cities and towns will see this? If the farmer cannot produce and sell he cannot buy. If he cannot keep stock his farm will run down. Barrenness will not support trade, but productiveness will. The town man must look ahead and around, and not always inside.—[Farm Journal.

Regularity on the Farm. es loaded or covered with the bacteria

Regularity on the Farm. Systematic feeding and care of every kind is the part of a farmer's capital that Nind is the part of a farmer's capital that makes the best investment. The cows should be fed, milked, and cared for morning, noon and night, with exactitude and on time. No milk is elaborated while cows are chafing and worrying for food and drink. The horses appreciate regularity, and know when feeding time comes. It is at these anxious delays that the stable is marred by pawing, biting and kicking, and irregularity produces had habits and had tempers in otherwise gentle beasts. The ducks, geese, turkeys, chickens, and all living creatures on the farm suffer from irregularity more than can be estimated in the farmer's loss of profit. Regularity brings contentment and thrift to all the live stock, kills the weeds that eat up the crop food, and fills the barns with the best quality of crops, pays off mortgages, replenishes the bank account, dresses the family, educates the children, and imparts tone, energy, respectability and character to all concerned.

Dropping Wool.

A correspondent desires to know what I makes sheep drop their wool in winter sometimes. The most prevalent cause is too warm quarters. I have seen a bunch of sheep shut in a tight room for the purpose of raising winter lambs, and shearing was neglected. By spring more than half of the wool had dropped, and they looked more ragged than the proverbial street arab. Sheep are sensitive to storms and cold winds, and should be protected from them. Sheltered from these is all the housing they require. The coldest nights of winter, if still and it does not anow, they choose to lie out in the open. A shed fully boarded on three sides, and four or five feet up on the other, that there may be no draft of sir, makes the most suitable quarters. Another cause of wool falling is feeding a too heavy grain ration at the commencement of grain feeding. Here great caution should be observed. They should be seasoned into it gradually before full feeding is entered upon.—[Stockman and Farmer. Dropping Wool.

Health on the Farm.

Drinking water is often impure. Many wells drain baruyards and unclean dooryards. The germs of typhoid and other fewers are in this water, and make successful attack on debilitated systems. Cellars are oftentimes dangerous to health. Decaying vegetables should always be taken out of them, as they furnish the location for development of germs. Whitewash is good. Health of farm stock requires warm but well ventilated quarters. All food has an equivalent in work, heat or fat. Stock often becomes debilitated because too much of their food is required to keep up animal heat. Our homes should be well ventilated, but draughts must be avoided. Violent exercise after hearty meals is injurious. Do not worry. The farming class furnishes more than its quota of insane There should be more recreation.

The public are waking up to the importance of honey as a remedy for ills that flesh is heir to. A boy comes regularly to our honey-house, saying. "I want some more honey for father." He says that honey is the best medicine for his lungs that he has ever had. Honey is in demand for the baby's sore mouth, sister's throat, and mother's cough, etc.—[Mrs. L. Harrison in Prairie Farmer.

Prairie Farmer.

An Indiana farmer correspondent writes:
I believe that white clover-honey is best; I believe that white clover-honey is best; not because it is the whitest, or has a better flavor; for to me basswood (linden) honey is the best flavored; and to others, raspberry, buckwheat, mangrove, orange, or some other honey is the best flavored. I have had hundreds of pounds of basswood honey that was whiter than any white clover honey I ever saw. But there is something in the composition of clover-honey that makes it more satisfying to the taste that I cannot describe, and is beyond the "ken" of science.
