The prisoner's relatives were so has erical that they could not go to see him after his return to the cell. There the man's calm composure broke for the first time. Throughout the trial he had sat coolly and collectedly in the prisoner's box, never a tremor of nervousness betraving his vivid realization that he was on trial for his life. Even when his counsel, Mr. Meredith, graphically pictured to the jurors the horrors of the condemned cell, and the final dropping trapdoor, he made no move. But alone in his cell this morning, facing the realization that 15 of the best years of his life would be spent in prison, he lost the self-control that had held him up.
