French Treaty a Gold Brick

Dr. Chisholm (St. Huron) said that matters affecting the farmers should not be discussed from a party standpoint. He had hoped that the new French Treaty would be of benefit to the farmers, but he feared that it was a gold brick.

trip to Europe. He commented on the attitude of the hog industry, and said that the farmers of this country required an inspection which would be of benefit to both the buyer and seller.

Dealing with the French Treaty, Dr. Barr twitted the Government for boasting of its reduction of the duty upon absinthe and adulterated wines and brandy. Absinthe was a horrible decoction which ruined mind and body alike.

He rebuked the Government for its years of reckless extravagance. True, these years had been years of plenty, but could not the Minister of Finance force that years of depression might follow. Why had he not garnered in his resources?

A Mythical Balance.

The Government boasted that it had six millions of dollars to its credit in the Bank of Montreal. They did not explain that they owed nearly that amount for money borrowed to build the Quebec bridge. If the bank tomorrow saw fit to make a cross-entry, the so-called "balance" would disappear. He claimed any desire to alarm the people of this country, but he felt it his duty to tell them that the sixty million dollars deposited by them in the postal savings bank had been largely used in paying the current expenses of the Government. Never since Nero had hidled at the burning of Rome had there been anything so attractive as Fielding's behaviour in treating in a jocular manner the pending financial crisis.

Dr. Barr dwelt at some length on the reference in the speech from the throne to Government control of telegraph and telephone companies. William Muloch had proposed progressive legislation on this subject, but that account had been forced out of the Government. He had been in storage at Osgoode Hall. Certainly some relief was needed. The railways were trying to kill off the small telephone companies by refusing them permission to cross their tracks. He believed that Government ownership was the sure solution.

Fielding's Offer a Bluff.

Mr. Lator (Haldimand) regretted that Mr. Roche had reflected upon the banks. He saw no reason for any criticism of the banks of Canada, who accommodated their customers as far as possible. The had been no necessity for the banks of Canada to be in moving the Western crops. That offer, said Mr. Lator, had been a bluff. He believed that the Government was making an effort to make political capital, and he was glad that the banks had no results to show for his the banks, by their unanimous action, had properly rebuked it. But Mr. Fielding was unreliable. A few days ago he had declared in the House that upon his election trial he had answered every question put to him. The Minister forgot that a printed record of that case was accessible. What did it show? It showed that Mr. Fielding had refused to answer hundreds of questions. He would not divulge anything that might cost him his friends and followers of crimes against the Election Act. Mr. Fielding had obtained his seat in parliament by giving a judgeship to a member of parliament in exchange for his seat. It was this sort of thing that brought the judiciary into contempt.

Mr. Lator then paid his respects to Mr. Pugh. Had that Minister been on the inside of the alleged corrupt deal in 1904? He apparently knew all about it, but he was not willing to have the campaign funds in that election investigated, although Mr. Barr had declared himself anxious for a full enquiry before a Royal Commission.

For Rural Mail Delivery.

Mr. Elson (East Middlesex) made a clear, strong argument in favour of rural mail delivery. No class of people were more deserving of benefits from the Government than the farmers. It was important to keep the people upon the farms and to make their lives attractive. There could be done best by giving them easy and cheap communication, thus making it possible for them to reach the outside world. Mr. Elson pointed out that the farmer who lived a mile and a half from his post office traveled no less than thirty miles in a single year to get his mail. Mr. Lemieux promised free rural delivery when Canada had twenty million people. But twenty million people scattered all over Canada would not make the same benefit to the farmer as twenty million people concentrated in a few points. There were certain portions of rural Ontario and Quebec. Why not grant rural delivery to those portions? It might be expensive, but we were voting enormous subsidies to railways and bonuses to iron and steel industries. The benefit to the farmer was very slight. They were always the last people to be considered by this Government. It was time for a reform; the Senate ought to be made non-partisan.

A Giant Across the Ocean

"It happened, in Toyland."—At least it seems now, as I look back on it, exactly as it seemed when I first contemplated the trip, as though it were too good to be true—that it could not be, but I rather it was a chapter from a book of fairy tales, and I was to be shadowed—it all seemed so unreal, so improbable that I, who should be going on more to Europe as members of an amateur party, should be to do "the tight little island" from John Groat's to Lands End, says a writer in the London Gazette.

The start was auspicious, the six members of the party, beside the chauffeur and the big 60-horse power motor, Duke of Northumberland, and together we boarded the superb Empress of Ireland, the Canadian Pacific's splendid liner, which was to take an ocean going vessel should be our trip, down the St. Lawrence, and across the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and on to the English Channel. Already we felt the foreign atmosphere as we sailed by our ribbon like fields, so trim and so narrow, of the French-Canadians, and read the quaint signs of the various stations from Montreal to the sea.

This was the season of icebergs, and as we reached the sea, the distance we passed six of them, giving us a touch of Christmas weather as we steamed past these great white islands.

In four days from our striking the water, we were in Liverpool, and soon motor, car, chauffeur and passengers were ready for the road.

And such roads. It sounds fairly diabolical to our winding way, but it can be found such highways. As a rule, up to this kind of road, the feeling of anxiety, unless his ancestors on the road for four generations back to the time of the first settlement, when he was invaded by all the world, who
