WOOED IN THE DOCK.

BY D. W. C. N. There were twenty-seven persons charged with various offences before his honor that morning. It was only about eighteen months ago.

foreheadless petty larcenist and the burly

the judge was late that morning and kept the prisoners waiting.

"Don't cry," the young man was saying to the girl who sat next to him. "I am sure you have done nothing wrong. I would pledge my life that you have not. Tell me your troubles and I will tell you mine. I have been with a wholesale jewel ler for two years, and I got into had commine. I have been with a wholesale jewel ler for two years, and I got into bad company, took some gold that I was to work up into a bracelet and sold it. I first accused some one of having stolen it, but last night I con essed. They had me arrested, and I shall plead guilty and take my punishment."

The girl turned her head quickly, and between her sobs said:

"But I—I have done nothing wrong; only one of the girls at the store where I only one of the girls at the store where I worked put some lace in my pocket because—because she is jealous of me, and then they found it there, and a policeman came, and—oh, my heart is breaking!"

"Hugh Murray, accused of robbing his employer, what have you to say?"

"Guilty."

"His face was whiten they are all the store was whiten.

His face was whiter than ever, but his mouth was firm and resolute and, after he had said the word that made him a convict, he faced the magistrate and said:

he faced the magistrate and said:

"Your honor, I have said guilty because I should be a liar if I said anything else; but, your honor, I have this to add to my plea: I never drank wine in all my life until last Friday night, and I was utterly under its influence when I took that gold."

And at this juncture an elderly man stepped forward and said, in a voice choked with emotion. "Your honor, I am this young man's employer, and I am sorry that I have taken these steps now. With your permission I will withdraw the charge."

But his honor only looked a little dimly through his spectacles and said: "Too late, complaint sworn to, arrest made, pris-

And so it came to pass that Hugh Murray expiated the one criminal act of his life ray expiated the one criminal act of his life by six months in the house of correction.

But before he left the dock he managed to whisper to his neighbor: "Tell me your name, won't you? I have been so bad, and I am sure you are so good; and perhaps when my punishment is over you who are so gentle will let me come and see you, and call you friend."

And she, with her great eyes all bleared with tears, said faintly: "My name is I sabel—Isabel Daly. I hope you won't ever be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you."

And he passed out of the dock with those words ringing in his ears: "I hope you won't ever be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you." And when he reached the cell from which they were to take him away to the house of correction, the firmness that kept him up so far all ruined by the wine cup, and left me for I don't know where. What can I do? How can I undo this?" There was no reply, for both hearts were too sull to speak for a moment; but the young man at last raised his head and said:

foreheadless petty larcenist and the burly burglar.

But there was something in this young girl's sobs, in this sorrow of the fair-haired maiden who had passed the night in the same cell with drunken prostitutes, temale dive thieves and women of the worst class, that was heart-breaking.

Even the bailiff of the court—accustomed to criminal misery and inured to scenes of suffering, from the suicide of a wanton to the execution of a murderer and his parting with his mother and sisters—even the bailiff felt touched, and, walking up to the bailiff felt touched, and, walking up to the railing, whispered some kind word in herear.

And next to her sat a young man pale as death. The humiliation of his position stool out in bold bas relief in his attitude and in every feature of his face, in the nervous clutch of his hands, in the shifting of his feet, the disarranged hair, and the silently expressed suffering.

The judge was late that morning and kept the prisoners waiting.

There was no reply, for both hearts were too full to speak for a moment; but the young man at last raised his head and said:

"I was not crying like a baby for my puishment, and I have nothing but good will to you. If you have been harsh to me! I don't know it. Let me be candid with you. "A few fair the field me and drunkers of the first time; but still I was both. If you think you have been harsh, then, when my puishment is over, help me to go somewhere where I can get work——a long way off, where my story is not known; and, as I live, I will repay your girl," he continued, "charged with stealing some lace, up-stairs. Will you see to her? I am sure she is innocent, and in the dock she forcot all her troubles for a moment to ask me never to be bad again. I was that, Mr. Belden, which made me give way so weakly."

nent physicians have assured her there was no remedy. She has travelled extensively in this and the old country, but to no avail. Her condition finally became such that she was unable even to dress herself or to comb her hair without assistance, and she could walk only a few feet at a time. In this state of health she came to the meeting, believing she could be healed. The journey was a great task to her strength; and she was unable to leave her bed. Dr. Cullis called on her and offered prayer in her behalf. She at once received strength, so that she was able to rise, make her own toilet, and walked some distance to the meeting. This she has done every may since, and believes that she is entirely cured. No one who is acquainted with the circumstances can doubt her statement.

The other case is that of an old gentle-doubt her statement.

The other case is that of an old gentleman who has used tobacco for over thirty years. So strong was the habit that he was not satisfied with chewing all day, but would rise two or three times during the night to get a chew. He was as much a save to it as a drunkard to his cups. Sunday morning he decided to give up the habit, and threw away his tobacco. That night he was almost insane as the result.

Dr. Cullis offered prayer in his behalf, and his appetite was entirely removed. He said that he felt perfectly well, and had no more desire for tobacco than the doctor himself.
