It is said that the women of that state took their stand at the polls and snatched the anti-prohibition tickets from the hands of voters; and consequently the danger is that this new moral influence will seriously inter-fere with the "liberty of the subject," and endanger the free exercise of the franchise. is stated that the medical profession is at the present time so crowded that it is difficult for a young man clothed with the dignity of M.D. and the sanction of the Medical Council to find a place not already fully supplied with doctors, and yet the number of those willing to serve the public in this capacity is larger this year than ever. The saying that there is room enough at the top cannot apply to the vast majority of those who obtain an M.D. diploma, for these positions are confined to the few, and to the many the consideration is to settle in a place which will grant a subsist-ence. If it is so, that this profession is for young men choosing a means of live-lihood whether they should not select some other calling in which competition is not so keen. To be sure, the country is extensive and growing rapidly in population, but if the supply continues to keep in advance of the demand, it is sheer folly to continue a state of affairs that is ruining the profession from a financial standpoint. There are scores of young men now in the professions who would be easier in mind and body had they chosen mercantile life or remained on the homestead; but the desire of having a profession seduced them away from what they were suited for, and to-day they are eking out a miserable existence in localities more than supplied with doctors and lawyers. Of course no law can interfere with the choice of a man in this dito the learned professions might be raised; and even if it were, it would be found that in the course of time crowding would again take it was considered premature. At the present place. The only way to put a stop to this rate of progress the time for its revival cannot place. The only way to put a stop to this unfortunate ambition of every young man with moderate ability to enter the professions is to allow things to take their course, knowing that, as in the lower order of existence, the survival of the fittest is the rule, so in the professions, it is only those who are the ablest that will acquire a competence in the battle life. The weak must go to the wall, and be a warning to the ambitious, that whereas we must have men in the professions we don't want the whole country in that capacity. There are other callings demanding brains and skill just as much as the legal and medical professions, which callings open up to the sober and industrious spheres of usefulness and wealth equal to if not greater than any of the professions, honorable though they be when

Editor World: I notice that at the last moeting of the City Councilone of the aldermen objected strongly to the sweeping of the crossing by the little newsboys, staling that they were a nuisance, and that the city had better employ men to do the work. This would cost the city considerable and the chances are that the work would not be done as well. Now what objection can there be to these poor little fellows earning an honest penny in this way! I am sure any one who has attempted to cross fing-street lately, especially the ladies, must bless Mr. Harry Piper for his efforts in this direction. It not only keeps the boys out of mischief but enables them to carry home many a copper to their poor mothers. For my part I think that they ought to be encouraged and not looked on in the light of a nuisance.

THE DIRECTORS' REPORT.

It affords your Directors much pleasure to be able to submit to you the following report of the affairs of your Company as at the Sist December, 1886, showing that the past year has been one of great prosperity and satisfactory progress.

The volume of new business—the premium income—the interest on our livestments—the number and amount of policies in force—the net and total assets—the reserve and surplus, have all been largely increased, and the amount paid for death claims is only a little more than half the amount paid the previous year. These facts are all fully verified by the following tabulated statement:

The amount of new business for 1886 is 37 per cent. greater than that of 1885, yet the ratio of expense to income has only been increased by one-third of one per cent.

We desire to call your attention to the rate of interest on our investments from which our surplus is of largely derived. Provious to 188 our interest income enabled us to allow eight over cent. on our interest hearing reserves, but our interest income our interest bearing reserves, the decline in the rate of interest on in ments at that time made it necessary to the rate to seven per cent, on reserves, when maintained up to the end of 1886.
