A STARTLING NOVEL

ELEVENTH YEAR

The Leader of the Opposition Supports in the Main the Beausoleil Amendment—Sir John Favors Davin's Proposition to Relegate the Question to the Northwest Assembly.

Ottawa, Feb. 17.—This was another field day for the McCarthy bill. Mr. Laurier resumed the discussion on the second reading immediately after routine. He was in his most eloquent and poetical mood and was listened to with eager attention. He declared that Mr. McCarthy was waging war against the French race and had insulted them throughout by the use of language he would not dare to use in the House, Thus at Stayner on July 12 he had elegantly described them as a "bastard nationality."

Of the bill he must confess that the language of the preamble was such that he could not believe that the intention of the mover was to enter upon such a movement as this preamble would as the intention of the mover was to enter upon such a movement as this preamble would and it is in house that he could not see why in the would presumate our as a support of the previous occasion, the preamble was not of very great significance. He could not see why in the world we should not grant the wish of the petition from the Northwest Assembly. He was not blind, however, to the feelings which had been aroused in this House, and he was therefore disposed to favor the proposition to refer the matter to the Northwest Assembly. The Premier's suggestion would, he believed, be the wisest policy to adopt.

Mr. Sproule favored the proposition to a refer the matter to the Northwest Assembly and he taunted Mr. Biske for the difference should not dare to use in the House. Thus at Stayner on July 12 he had elegantly described them as a "bastard nationality."

cared that Mr. McCarthy was waging we against the French race and had insuled them throughout by the use of language he would not dare to use in the Housa. Thus at Stayner on July 13 he had elegantly described them as a "bastard nationality." Mr. McCarthy's ultimate object was the benefit of the Comervative party, for although not an obedient soldier he was carrying on a guerilla wartare on its behalf, affecting the part of a free lance. He taunted Mr. McCarthy and his fellow-Conseratives with having gone back on the French because they were no longer in a body supporture of the Tory party. Mr. McCarthy would now have them feel the yoke of oppression by the English majority and secure for hig party the united support of Ontario.

Mr. Laurier advocated a policy that would foster the common feeling of patriotism and destined to remain so, and he did not sympathies with the feeling expressed by a few of his fellow-countrymen in favor for founding a French nation on the banks of the St. Lawrence.

Pity Disdained.

He objected to the meddlesome interference, the whining pity, bestowed by some good men in Ontario on the pack of the St. Lawrence. This was examplified by the speech of Mr. Charlton in the obtain the stripe of Mr. McCarthy there, but in England they did not fine the stripe of the stripe of the stripe of the stripe of the world. This very fact made it imperative upon French Canadians that though they retained their own language they must also learn the English and the French canadians that though the retained they found the first way for the first way for the first of the million inhabitants of the body the dominating Language to made in party would endeavor to make Canada English by would endeavor to make Canada English by the same means as British statesmen had endeavered as long to make the surface of the stripe of Mr. McCarthy would endeavor to make Canada English by the same means as British statesmen had endeavered as long to make the surface of the stripe of Mr. McCarthy would endeavor to make Cana

Mr. Russell said the charge he made against the Parnellites was certainly true. Now the Parnellites embrace Earl Spencer. The Opposition asserted that Balfour had enforced the coercion law with needless severity. Probably the press clause in the Crimes Act was unwise but in other respects coercion had assisted to restore and maintain order in Ireland.
