Come to me home. I am one who would give alms if you want them. Reflect on this. Look at your black angels." The envelope and inclosure were handed to the police, who submitted them to Professor Bickerton. His report was to Mr. Chiniquy, and which I received from Detective Neil; and find it to contain nothing znero than varnish and dead flies."

A Moorish Duel.

A sickening account of a duel in Morocco is given by a correspondent of the Republique Francaise. Two young men of noble birth were paying their attentions to the daughter of a neighboring chief, and, as she showed equal favor to each of them, it was arranged by mutual consent that they should meet in single combat and fight a duel to the death. The conditions of the duel were that they should meet on horseback, each of the combatants being armed with a rifle, a revolver and a hunting knift. They were placed a hundred yards apart, and upon a given signal by one of the seconds they set their horses at rull gallop and rushed at each other. For a moments the spectators could see nothing but a cloud of dust, from out of which were heard two successive reports of a rifle, and then a third, followed by the neighing of a horse. When the dust had cleared away, a shocking sight met the gase of the spectators; one of the combatants, concealed behind his dead horse, was taking aim at his adversary, who still remained in the saddle. The latter spurred his horse and made it rear, the noble beast receiving in his chest the bullet meant for his master. The press, "If this Empire was offered us we rider, as soon as he was dismounted, rushed forward to grapple with his adversary, but a second shot fractured his left shoulder. Nevertheless, he retained sufficient strength to discharge two chambers of his revolver, both shots taking effect. A hand-to-hand combat then ensued, the two adversaries, neither of whom was able to stand, stabbing each other repeatedly. When the seconds and spectators at last interfered the two were picked up dead-one with his teeth firmly set in his adversary's cheek, while the latter's hand was thrust into a gaping wound in the other's chest.

An Ancedete of Bishop Dupanioup

A most interesting book will be the Bicgraphy of Mgr. Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, which his friend, the Abbe Lagrange, is now preparing. In the meantime, a little memoir has appeared from the pen ot Lucian Edward Henry, under the title of "The Last Days of Bishop Dupanloup." This, of course, is a mere biographical fragment compared with the larger work that is to come, and a very pleasant foretaste it is of the full feast. Among other anecdotes in its pages is a very characteristic one. During the good Bishop's last holiday, when his health was rapidly failing, he went on a conkey, led by a little boy, to call on a parish priest, who proved to be absent from home. At the presbytery, however, he found a messenger with a "sick-call" from a dying woman. "I also am a priest," said the bishop; and he set off up the mountains on a two hours' expedition, returning to his quarters in the pitch darkness of sweet evening. His hosts and some of the clergy came out to greet him with reproaches. "Do not scold me," he meekly pleaded, " for I am very wet," and slipped off quietly to bed. The account given by Mr. Henry of the waning of a life that was so precious to the Bishop's own country and to the whole Church is very pathetic. When his last illness came, he gave up lingeringly one pleasure and duty after another. He was wont to walk in an avenue reciting his Breviary, the book which, after nearly half a century of daily repetition, he pressed to his heart during those closing days, exclaiming, "Oh, how could anyone live without it?" At the end of this avenue he was once found seated, wrapt in melancholy. His expression disturbed those who were about him, but, when they went to comfort him, he said, in a grave voice, "My friends, I love only silence now." And this from him whose eloquent voice had been heard so often, and with such splendid effect, in the interest of religion in the land where his absence, in the present crisis of her history, is indeed a calamity. Such are some of the marvellous transformations made by the presence of

A Letter Writer.

The New York Evening Post has discovered new occupation of a most romantic nature in the metropolis. It is that of a little woman whose business it is to write notes for fashionable women whose indolence or lack of skill in penmanship or in the art of epistolary composition forbids them to write notes for themselves. She has many clients. Some of them engage her for specified hours of each day to write whatever notes there may be occasion to send, while others employ her only upon particular occasions when there is more writthe sunken steamer Fernville, have arrived ing than usual to be done. Her experiences at St. Pierre Miquelon on the barque Valliare varied and interesting. Sometimes she has to prepare answers to notes that she herself has written; upon a few occasions, when invitations not yet received whre known to be coming, she had to prepare answers to them at the house before writing them at another, but being a discreet little body she keeps her own counsel in such cases, and does not reveal the nature of the replies already prepared to the client whose invitations they are meant to answer. The Post adds:

"This obscure worker knows how to turn sentences cleverly; she can say graceful things gracefully; she can write a note which sparkles all over with good humor and effects its purpose. This is her skill, her equipment, her capital in life. Of its kind it is as genuine as any. The things she knows how to do are things that need to be done. There is a positive need for ber skill as for that of the plumber-if we may imagine a plumber who really has skill-and, however completely without recognition her business may be among trades and professions, it is as legitimate as any. There are women who cannot write the notes and letters required of them with satisfaction to themselves, and other women who can do so, but dislike the occupation, and many of them are glad to pay for the service. The professional letter writer has managed to turn it to account in securing employment for herself."

"The pure flour of the finest Mustard Seed without any adulteration or dilution." This is the report of the Government Analyist on Colman's Genuine Mustard. Users of this article may just as well buy the best. This is the only pure brand in the market, all others being what is called "Mustard Condiments," that is mustard mixed with farnia etc.,-and do not possess the pungent aromatic flavour of the genuine article-Be sure you get "Colman's" with the Bull's Head on every 11-G tin.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. #### WHAT IS VASELINE?

As the use of this wonderful product increases, in the same ratio do people ask what is Vaseline? Vaseline is the highly purified heart or body of Rock Oil or Petroleum. Petroleum was, is, and ever will be considered one of nature's gifts to us. The various uses to which Petroleum is put, and the different sources from which its useful properties were first discovered, are too numerous which science employs it.

The medicinal qualities of Petroleum and its wonderful effect in promoting the vigor and luxuriance of the hair were certuries ago known to the American Indians, who first discovered it floating on the borders of the mountain lakes. But now, what fault have we with it? Its odor, that curious and lasting smell. To expel this, then, and retain its medicinal and toilet properties, because a field for scientific investigation, scientists, chemists and analysts energetically sought the method by which this could be accomplished, and Mr. Robt. A. Chesebrough, of New York, was the discoverer He found that by a certain process the odorous and burning qualities could be removed, and the medicinal properties retained without deterioriation.

This component of Rock Oil, by his process, is of about the consistency of butter, inodorous and tasteless, it is then purified, and to this essence he gave the name of Vaseline, composed of two words, "Saxon Wasser" and the Greek "Elaion," which the discoverer believes Petroleum to be, "Water Oil."

tor can be used for the same purposes as Castor Oil, passing through the system unchanged.

The ancient Hebrews were famous for their beautiful black hair. To this day the Jews delight in cultivating that most ornamental of all ornaments. It may have been that Luby's Parisian Hair Renewer was then in vogue, but it is almost certain something of that nature existed. It can now be had at all chemists for 50c. the bottle.
