

Transcaucasus. Proposals to create a new non-NATO security institution which would tie Russia to the rest of the world will also be briefly outlined.

The argument put forward is that, in the new international climate, there is a tremendous opportunity for Russia and NATO members to cooperate to counter the key security threats to world peace. NATO is the only institution which has both the political capacity to unite these countries, and the military means to counter the new threats.