

The Governors of McGill University have announced that, with the concurrence of the Trustees of Queen's University, Mr E.W.Beatty has been elected Chancellor of the former Institution in succession to Sir Robert Borden whose resignation was tendered in 1920.

The new Chancellor of McGill has been a member of the Governing Board for some years and when, in 1919, the Queen's Chancellorship became vacant he was, with the consent of the McGill Board, selected to succeed the late Dr. James Douglas.

When the McGill Chancellorship in turn became vacant through the resignation of Sir Robert Borden, Mr Beatty was invited to accept it and at subsequent joint conferences of representatives of the two Boards, Queen's University generously and unanimously approved the arrangement, Mr Beatty in the meantime, remaining Chancellor of Queen's University.

The fortunate outcome of the negotiations between Queen's and McGill is due to a very generous recognition by each of the other's problems and appreciation of the fact that both, as Institutions of Learning, have ideals in common.
