Garibald, dying, bade his countrymen make no peace until Trieste had come under the Italian flag. Moreover, Italy has recently made an info and agreement with France. Their feets have exchanged visits, and their rulers courtesies. Germany, with a covetons eye on Galicia, would probably ally herself with England. Italy's intorests would lie with Russia and against Austria, tho she could be bought by a surrender to her of control of the Adriatic.

Anstria herself enters little into the problem. That the Aligament Will Be.

There remain the so-culed independent Balkan States—Servia, Roumania, Bulgaria, etc. But it is well understood that Russia has a "secret" understanding with each of them, and that they would elfanh her protection in case of war. The powers not already named would be neutral, with Portugal, of course, wholly at the beek of England.

The conflict, then, would probably shape itself thus: Russia, France and Italy against England, Germany and Austria, with unhappy Turkey in the centre of the melee. Granting that Italy were purchased by the gift of the Adriatic coast, she covets, the struggle would he neutry squal. If Spain were drawn into the war she would side with France.
