Same Code of Honor Should Prevail in Politics as in Private Life.

With a great deal of enthusiasm, the stalwarts of Conservatism in Ward Six gathered to listen to the representatives in the Dominion House who were spending their week-end at home. It was the last of a series of meetings that have been held thruout the winter.

The chair was taken at 9 o'clock by A. Claude Macdonell, honorary presi-Mr. Crealock. The meeting, he ex plained, was a wind-up for the season to enable the Conservatives to be ready for the general elections whenever they treasury benches in Ontario were only there for a time. At Ottawa all that was good was seen to emanate from the Conservative side, which was never in a stronger or healthier condition. He then invited E. F. Clarke, M.P., E. B. and Ald. McGhie to take a seat upon the platform.

Ald. McGhie opened the proceedings He expressed pleasure in the activity of the party, and was sure that it would be ready when the time came to do its duty. He thought it impossible for the Liberal party to carve up the city so as to injure the Conservative interests. There was, in Toronto, material enough to return five Conservative members,

E. B. Osler, M.P., thanked the meeting for the enthusiasm with which he was received on rising to speak. He had sometimes thought politics a game hardly worth the playing, but he felt it was his duty on being asked to stand in the interests of the people to accept the honor. Having accepted the honor, he felt the obligation lay upon him to serve first the interests of the Dominon and, secondly, the interests of West

The most melancholy object that had been seen was the method by which the government had retained power, and the callousness of the public at the evidence of those methods that had recently been revealed. The same code of honor should prevail in politics as in private life. If in Canada we were to have one standard of honor in private life and another in public life it was going to sink us in the eyes of the world to the level of the lowest of the South

It required no judgment of a commis-sion as to what were the facts in the Gamey-Stratton case. The public knew that the Ross government had bribed a man to retain itself in power. This

Ross and Hon. Ross and Hon known, came to Ottawa in hot haste having learned that strong influences | Premier Ross arrived in the city Sunwere behind the scheme of a govern- press. ment-owned road from Quebec to Winnipeg. The execution of this scheme. Mr. Ross well knows, would seriously affect the Ontario government plans for subsidizing the Grand Trunk's transcontinental road. It is stated that the assurance he re ceived from Sir Wilfrid satisfied him that the Dominion government would not undertake the construction of the road from Quebec to Winnipeg. I'remier Laurier, of course, is a bitter enemy of the principle of public ownership, and he is bitterly opposed to MANSON-Suddenly, at his late residence any extension of the government railway. It is a question if Sir Wilfrid has measured or is yet in a position to measure the cabinet influences that are behind the government ownership plan. Neither does he fully realize the following that these cabinet influences
