Members, Too, Have Rights.

"The Government," he said, "has some rights, but the right of a private member should not be ignored. This is a private matter; not a public matter. It has nothing to do with the carrying on of the war. I don't think for a moment that there will be a change of Government if the premier's amendment is voted down. And I don't think that we should be placed in any false position. Private members have some right to fair play."

In a brief speech, Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced his intention of opposing the prime minister's amendment, stating that if he were a Conservative he would hesitate to vote for it. He did not think the matter should be looked upon as a party question. He said he would vere for Mr. Richardson's amend-TO LIMBO, AND AN OBEDIEN motion of a private member. Then Hon. Charles Murphy, from the Opposition side, ventured the opinion that in the eyes of certain gentlemen the question before the House might be considered as having a lot to do with the winning of the war, or at least with the carrying on of a certain phase of it.

Sutherland of Oxford declared in stentorian voice his absolute and comdeem proper.

Move For New Election.

Continuing the debate on the main motion, Mr. Lapointe claimed the whole stentorian voice his absolute and com-plete opposition to all artificial distinc-tions. But he declared it to be his in-tention to vote against the motion of the man who would abolish all titles. Buchanan of Medicine Hat declared himself to be in favor of the abolition of all'titles, declared it fervently, but of all titles, declared it fervently, but proposed to vote with the premier. Pardee of West Lambton in his first speech of the session waxed eloquent in his condemnation of titles, against which the whole spirit of Canada cried out. But he proposed to vote against the amendment calling for their complete abolition.

One after another they arose, all opposed, eachy soul and spirit to titles. One after another they arose, all opposed, pody, soul and spirit, to titles of any kind, but all wishful to get under the wing of the Government, which they did not desire to see defeated and overthrown in its very infancy.

Autocracy Established.

Thus has an autocracy been established in the Canadian Parliament.

Thus have the "independent" representatives of the people who were elected to support the Government on its war measures, been reduced to the consistency and usefulness of rubber stamps. Thus has it been proven that the "new Union Government" is simply the "old Borden Government," camouflaged and camouflaged but badly indeed.

The committee in due time reported, recommending that the case be referred to a judicial body for adjudication. OTTAWA, May 21.—The Borden Government was re-elected to office with a majority bordering upon 70, for the purpose, it is said, of "carrying on the war." And yet tonight it threatened to go out of office if its followers voted for a resolution calling for the abolition of all titles in Canada, except those which designate military or naval rank.

Just what this institution of titles has to do with the carrying on of the war, some honorable gentlemen could not percelye. But those who noted the venerable head of Sir Joseph Wesley Flavelle, Bart., hanging over the gallery rail probably guessed.

Borden Threatens to Quit.

Twice today did the Government club (not whip) its followers to fall to heel and lick its hand by threat held out, first by the whips, and later, boildy and frankly, by the prime minister himself, that if they did as the consciences of many of them prompted, he would place this resignation in the hands of the government of a new set of advisers. Titles Bring the Test.

But the real test of the "new Union Government" came when the adjourned debate on titles was continued this afternoon and evening. There could be no doubt in the world that the motion and the amendment on which this deand the amendment on which this deand the amendment on which this de-bate was based, were not Government motions. Nickle of Kingston had moved that all hereditary titles be abolished, together with "reflective" titles. Sir Robert Borden had, when the motion lovernment had passed another of its ternal orders-in-council, expressing lisapproval of hereditary titles, requesting the imperial authorities to trant none other excepting on the approval of the prime minister. Both

Mr. Nickle and the prime minister. Both Mr. Nickle and the prime minister found before the debate had gone very far that they had underestimated the temper of the new representatives of the people, on the matter of class distinctions, and Richardson of Springfield, grassing the operations of springfield, grasping the opportunity, moved for the olition of all titles. Then the premie came in and advised that the debate be adjourned until a resolution might be framed which would meet with the whanimous approval of the House. Made a Government Issue.

That was a non-partisan discussion.

And yet today the Government undertook to stake its reputation, and its very existence upon the question. exclude military and naval distinctions but the prime minister forestalled Mr. Nickle, ichardson, and incidentally Mr. Nickle, moving an amendment to the endment calling for the adoption the House of that order-in-council. The various motions were debated ad lib. It was soon evident that the great majority of the members on both sides were entirely in accord with the motion for the complete abolition of civilian titles. Then something happened.

There was some consternation in the House, and cries of "no, no" from the Opposition side. Campbell of Nelson rose to his feet. He had understood and still understood that the debate was on a private member's motion. "If," he said, in a level voice, "a vote against the premier's amendment is a vote of want of confidence, then I am sorry that I am here. The premier was flushed and angry at the straight question. He said a lot about the Government having given much attention to this question. For the rest, however, his speech—if speech it could be called—was spoiled. Willingly and obediently, driven by the declarations of the whips, that to vote down the Government in this would mean a vote of lack of confidence, the Government followers voted for the return of Dr. Thompson, and for the defeat of F. T. Congdon, who had traveled from Dawson to plead his case.

Only W. S. Fielding and John Campbell of Nelson, Man., stood up with the Opposition for "fair play, and for the kind of a spirit which will appear to the people."

Field influstly had been caused by the difficulty had been caused by the war times election act.

There were some men who professed respect for this document, but Mr. Fielding said he was not one of them. In fact, it would require very strong language to express his views on this place of legislation.

Mr. Fielding argued that the soldiers had not voted for Dr. Thompson. They had not voted for Dr. Thompson. They had not voted for Dr. Thompson. According to all available information both candidates had been supporters of conscription. The refore, on the issue in which the soldiers were, after vain protests, forced them to Dr. Thompson. Therefore, on the issue in which the soldiers were interested, they stood on even terms.

"It was not the soldiers who sentries thereus." "What right had the prime minister to allot all the votes to the Conservative candidate when both candidates were conscriptionists?" asked Hon. Mr. Fielding. "It was not the soldiers who had voted for Dr. Thompson; it was the premier. It would not be the soldiers we would be disqualifying, but merely the prime minister."

J. H. Burnham asked Mr. Fielding whether Mr. Congdon had stated to him that he was in favor of conscription.

Mr. Fleiding replied that it had been stated over and over again in the

Mr. Fleiding replied that it had been stated over and over again in the House and never been questioned, that Mr. Congdon was a conscriptionist.

A. L. Davidson—Is it not true that Mr. Congdon was indorsed by the leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Fleiding said it was within the province of the Liberal leader to indorse what candidate he liked. The point was whether or not Mr. Congdon was a supporter of conscription, and he understood that he was. The minister of justice, Mr. Fleiding went on, had declared that courts in considering to a barrel.

he understood that he was. The minister of justice, Mr. Fielding went on, had declared that courts in considering the matter, would be confined to the strict letter of the law. To denounce the strict letter of the law was the argument of soap box orators.

"What Are We Coming To?"

"The letter of the law denounced by the minister of justice," Mr. Fielding asked, "What are we coming to?"

Mr. Fielding declared that the solicitor-general had intimated they were going to slam the door in Mr. Congdon's face, and then ask him to come in. That's not fair play; that's not playing the game, he concluded. Hon. Arthur Meighen opposed Mr. Fielding's views. He declared that, while both of the candidates prior to the election in the Yukon had at some time supported conscription, yet one of them supported it in principle and practice, and took the only course that would have resulted in its enforcement. The other, he said, while he may have supported it, was, nevertheless, indorsed by the leader of the anti-conscriptionist party.

A by-election in the Yukon, said Mr. Meighen, would mean an appeal to only four fifths of the electors. A full vote for the summer of 1917 to the spring for the summer of 1917 to the spring for the summer of 1917 to the spring for the summer of 1918 were the grossest scandal, and Speaker Rhodes said he did not think Mr. Meighen intended the remark to bear the meaning which had been taken from it by Mr. McMaster. If he thought so, he would demand its withdrawal.
