FARRER OBJECTS TO MINOR EXTRAVAGANCES

And Ald. Nicholson Tells Him He is Always Sticking His Nose In Other People's Business.

HAMILTON, July 13.—(Special).—Outside the short discussion on the subject of power there was little of interest in the council proceedings this evening.

Alderman Farrer found fault with a bill of $69 for locks for the city hall doors, and Ald. Nicholson told him that he was always sticking his nose into other people's business. The account was passed. Alderman Anderson also criticized a bill of $60 for the expenses incurred by Alderman Clark and the secretary of the fire and water committee for a banquet at a convention in Washington. All the bills were laid over.

The funeral of Miss Jessie McKellar, daughter of T. H. and Mrs. McKellar, 326 West Main-street, will be held Tuesday afternoon.

An inquest was opened this evening on the death of James Sturrock, who was fatally burned in an explosion at Doolittle and Wilcox's stone quarry. The inquest was adjourned after the medical testimony had been put in.

At this evening's meeting of the separate school board Trustee Bryne insisted upon handing in his resignation because he saw some non-union labor had been employed on the St. Ann's school building. His colleagues told him that union labor was being used where possible and the only place in which it had not been used was in making the cement blocks, and there was no union in that business. The board refused to accept the resignation.

Wm. Dunn was arrested to-night on the charge of stealing some rubber and brass.

Jonathan Bowerman, father of ex-Alderman William Bowerman, died this evening at his residence in West Flamboro.

The residents of Herkimer-street are petitioning against the proposal of the street railway company to widen the "dove" strip.

Jos. Alter, Sam Trottenberg, Samuel Vintsky and Max Brower, Toronto, were each fined $40 by the police magistrate this morning for playing cards on Sunday.

Irvy Blythe, 39 Oxford-street, a shipper, employed at the B. Greening Wire Works, died in the elevator shaft Saturday.

Miss H. Adeline Smith has resigned her position as soloist at the Centenary Church.

The body of Joseph Champagne, who was drowned Thursday afternoon, was recovered this morning in good condition for rent. Terms very reasonable. Apply 75 North James-street, Hamilton.

FROM McGRADY'S ALLEY.
The Story of an Adopted Family.
There is a true ring of sentiment to be found in the experiences of foster-mothers as told in "The August Delineator." One woman, who in the generosity of her heart took to her home a whole family, tells her story as follows:

No, they are not my own children. I adopted them all. Five does and seem a large number, but I didn't see how I could take one without the others.

Where we lived ten years ago, there was a shanty. The McGrady family were a shanty family, a man, a pale, weak thing, the man, a sullen creature. But the children, five of them, were regular sunbeams, playing on our back porch, begging for cookies—and, indeed, they were often hungry.

Then one day as I was cuddling the youngest McGrady baby on my lap I heard a cry, but the baby down and rushed out. McGrady was there on a stretcher, and the poor wife was rocking to and fro in agony. She never was herself again. We buried the father, and after the funeral we held a consultation over the children. Finally, we divided them, and I took the baby.

And then, I really don't know how it happened, the others came to see her, and they would stay, and when we moved I took them all.

"Trouble? Of course, they are a trouble, and a care, and a happiness, and a blessing, all in one. And I couldn't see the joke. There is no life for a woman without them, even if it meant McGrady's Alley and the old shanty I should keep them, every one."

NOTED BISHOP DEAD.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 11.—Right Rev. Alfred A. Curtis, Roman Catholic Bishop of Wilmington, Del., died here at 8:45 a.m.

BURBANK'S NEW WANDER THE THORNLESS CACTUS

Hard to Believe That It Can Be Put to So Many Uses—Wholesome Food for Man or Beast.

Many and marvelous are the tales told of Burbank's thornless cactus. This new creation in plant life means more to the farmer and stock-raiser than any production of the past century. A fodder which will grow without irrigation and which flourishes like the green bay tree when given a moderate amount of water, which will yield four to eight times as much in feeding value per acre as alfalfa, which is superior to alfalfa in many respects, and which may be cut green the year around, and which will excite the deepest and most abiding interest among the practical ranchers of the great west.

Pratt Bearing Vegetable.
A vegetable that bears fruit, it is a plant that is relished by every animal. A feed superior in some or all respects to any now in use. An excellent substitute for sorghum hay for dairy stock. A wholesome food for man. These are but a few of the virtues of the Burbank thornless cactus that have come to be generally known and recognized.

The unfolding marvels of the Burbank cactus are unending. The experiments which have been conducted by the company which secured from Luther Burbank the exclusive right to propagate and distribute these plants and tests made by government experts have established many hitherto unknown truths about the cactus.

Not Family Every 84 Weeks.
One is that it not only grows much faster than the wild cactus, but it recovers each season, but the leaves do not bud and reproduce the same season.

Another wonderful thing about the Burbank thornless cactus is the pertinacity with which it clings to life, and the difference it displays to the feelings of face, a young green plant thrown out on the desert soil at Buffalo, exposed to the fierce rays of the tropic sun, without a drop of moisture, what it could do in the only place—after six weeks of such neglect—thrust a few inches into the ground, and reproduced.

Plants accidentally blown over, mutilated or uprooted, showed no concern for their growth or deterioration. One slab was cut up into strips and sections, which were kept in a box, growing and prospering. Several hundred of the leaves were set out in the sun-baked soil and left alone for ten weeks with a drop of water. They all budded and reproduced just the same.

The company is now preparing for its first distribution of plants in the spring. Orders are being taken from every part of the civilized world.

TRAVELER INJURED.
Auto Scans Horse and W. B. Crenson is Thrown Out.

STOUFFVILLE, July 13.—While W. B. Crenson, commercial traveler, of London, Ont., was being driven from Stouffville to Markham this afternoon, he was met by an automobile in charge of Mr. Poole of Toronto. The horse became frightened and the driver lost control. The buggy struck the fence, throwing the driver and Crenson out. Crenson sustained a compound fracture of the collar-bone and other injuries which were brought to Stouffville in the automobile and attended to by Dr. Sangster.

NEW HOLIDAY SPOT.
Editor World: There is a pretty little spot I am visiting in the Township of Hartono, in the County of Hastings, called Crow Lake. I came by way of Trenton and Central Ontario to Marmora. I would not advise any person in a hurry to take this route. However, it suited me as I wanted to study the nature of the Trent Valley country, and see the big steam shovels at work at Trent Valley. My desire was fully granted. A few miles before arriving at Frankfort the River Trent winds very beautifully in the valley, while the surrounding hills reminded me very much of the Hudson river to the greatest limit of speed we attained was about ten miles per hour. As the train was making a great deal of noise the conductor informed me that the engineer was just using the exhaust. I told him I noticed the noise was puffing a good deal and seemed quite exhausted, but he was like the train, too slow to see the joke. However, all things have an end, and in due time we arrived at Marmora, from which place my friends drove me out to Crow Lake, where I intend staying for the next week or three weeks. It is a beautiful lake, some three miles wide and five miles long, interspersed with headlands and small islands—a sportsman's paradise. The fishing cannot be beat. On Wednesday and Thursday I friend and I caught over 50 pounds of black bass, some weighing over 4 pounds—magnificent fish. Last year I had very little success. This year, however, pays up for it. My friends are armers, but the shore is a dip in the lake every morning, lots of cream and huckleberries, two egg nois every day and all the bass and trout and many other delicacies, so my holiday promises to be a most enjoyable one. I would advise anyone who wants sport and rest to come here, where they will get it.

THE PILOT.
A Talk With a Thames Man in the Now.

London Globe.
A bright sunny day in spring with an easterly wind blowing and the atmosphere so clear that you could look far out beyond the Nore and trace the coastline nearly down to Margate. Sheerness was almost opposite and Garrison Point at the lower corner and the Mole in the centre of the Medway, standing out distinctly and in the mouth of the river were two or three coastguards. The pilot for the present so proclaimed himself was armed with a large binocular glass with which he scanned the estuary, but his investigations were chiefly far out to sea, as if he were in expectation of some vessel of importance leaving into sight. Again and again he turned the binocular in the same direction, only to be disappointed, and after a while he laid the glass down by his side on the seat upon which he was sitting. He was a cherry man, bronzed and weather-beaten, with clear, penetrating eyes. He was somewhere about middle age and inclined to be communicative. He said we ought to have a few casual and cheerful remarks, he would take up his glass and scan the wide estuary seaward intently, but he still refused to disclose whether he was in search of a crowd of sailing vessels, barks, brigs and schooners and smaller craft were lying off the long pier yonder. "This is a heavy wind," said the pilot, "and they can't get out to sea, but the breeze is favorable for my son, and he ought to be sighted now with the ship he is piloting through the strait, and then he went on to say that he himself had been a Thames pilot for over thirty years, but did not take much interest in the pilotage as formerly, and his son was now the leading spirit. Being communicative and having a sympathetic ear, he said that the vessel his son was piloting was one of a merchant fleet of Swedish and Norwegian vessels, ice and timber ships, which he had had great experience of. He said that he was very much interested in the home fleet and made some sensible remarks, as we thought, on the subject of the "LITTLE ENGLAND" and he denounced the Little Englanders who would reduce our navy. He was certain that a great struggle would be fought on the evening when the pilot noticed we were gazing intently at his glass and turned it in the direction toward which we were looking. The ship he saw was a pilot boat, he said, and he was satisfied and she and her companions came bravely on with a stiff easterly breeze behind them.

Questioned as to exciting times during his career he complacently answered that he had met with very few mishaps, but he grew excited again as he spoke of the pleasure river steamboats. He had met with a great freight year ago, and would never forget the awful scene. He was returning down stream on the evening when the Princess Alice was cut down by a big steamship. He did not pass until after the collision and the rescue of the passengers, but he said it was horrible to hear the cries of the men and the screams of the women and children who were lamenting their lost friends and relatives and urging the rescuers to make further efforts when all hope was abandoned. The old pilot went on to say that he had seen the shrieks and cries of those who had been rescued and friends aboard. And then he said that if he had his way, no pleasure boats, with their great living freights, should ply higher up the river than Tilbury and Gravesend. "It's going up the river in the twilight of dark which is so dangerous," he said, "especially when the river is full of craft, as it is nearly always is. Of course a great many passengers get off now-a-days at Tilbury and Gravesend. It's tempting providence to go further up stream."

The easterly wind still blew strongly and the Scandinavian ships came bravely along, passing the long pier near to which so many less fortunate vessels lay idle owing to the strong wind which prevented them getting out to sea. The sun was still shining brilliantly, but the easterly wind blew stronger and keener. The estuary looked at its best, and the Scandinavian vessels, with the pilot's son on board one of them, would soon be abreast of us. His anxious and proud father took a glance thru his glass now and then to see that all was right, and while away on the time a little longer by discoursing of the yachting and fishing. "The yachts are far more numerous, and the fishing isn't near so good," he remarked. "But it blows a bit differently now. I shall be glad to stretch my legs to the railway station and to meet my boy up-stream in a few hours." And with another glance out into the estuary, he turned up the collar of his pilot jacket, and with a cheery "Good day," went his way.

A THROW-DAY.
Turn on the power, you didn't hear no bell. You say you thought you did? Well, you're in wrong. I've got no sister—Gee, your nerve is strong. Excuse me, I seem to say farewell. This ain't the market for the dope you sell. You better mingle wid some other throng. Just sift into the breeze an' blow along. What's that? Ain't you goin' YET! Say, Nell. It makes me sick the way some guys butt in. The phoney plays they'll make to flag a skirt. An' how it is they think they ought to win. An' why they ain't afraid they might get hurt. I wouldn't want to do no person dirt. But Gee, I wish the cops would run them in!

Thought She Knew Him.
A short time ago a surgeon had three leg amputations in a week. The unusual number caused talk in the surgeon's household, and his little daughter, Dorothy, was greatly interested. A few days after the last operation, the surgeon's wife and little Dorothy were rummaging in the attic. In a trunk was found a degenere-type depicting a girl about eight years of age. The portrait, thru peculiarity of pose, showed only one leg of the subject, the other being doubled up under only one leg.

"Whose picture is that, mamma?" asked Dorothy.

"Mine. It was taken when I was a child, not much older than you are now."

"Did you know papa then?"

"No, dear. Why do you ask?"

"I thought maybe you did, 'cause you've got me one leg!"—The August Delineator.
