

Great Care Necessary In Lining Hat

"Home Millinery" Lesson Explains How Delicate Task of Putting In Silk Lining Is Accomplished

Method of inserting the lining is clearly illustrated by this picture. Notice especially how the stitching is done, shown in Figure 1.

(By Clarissa Chesley) Haven't you often wondered how in the world a hat which had been trimmed with some kind of fragile trimming could be lined without musing it all up? The answer to this question is shown in Figure 2 above. You will see that the hat is held by the left hand under the right arm and that the brims rest against the milliner's body. In order to show the exact kind of stitches, Figure 1 is used. You see there is one long stitch and then a short back stitch which is used to keep the silk from slipping. To begin the lining by one-quarter of a yard of thin taffeta or lining silk, the length determined by three times the diameter of the hat. First turn over the lengthwise edge of the silk a half inch and stitch it down to form a casing. Sew

IMPERIAL TONIGHT The Imperial Theatre programme for today and tomorrow has undergone a radical change since the Saturday announcement—all improvement in every way. The leading feature is Lublin's two-act story, "The Stolen Yacht," being the adventure of two lovers aboard a craft, fought by revolutionists and used in smuggling ammunition. "The Harlots of Helms" contains some of the most daring railway feats yet shown on the curtain, the Heart-Selig Weekly depicts a large number of interesting war views and another of the Geo. Ade's fables in slang, will be pictured by the Essanay Co. Miss Ashe will sing and the vaudeville offering for this week is little Marion Weeks, a charming comedienne, who has delighted high-priced audiences in Kent's best houses for the last six months. On Wednesday and Thursday, Charles Dickens' "David Copperfield" will be shown in six acts.

SOLDIERS' WILLS A Matter of Local Interest At Present Time Will Privileges Extend to the Canadian Forces—Matter Discussed in Central Law Journal

(Montreal Journal of Commerce.) Among the legal questions that will arise out of the European war, the question that will probably be raised the oftenest will be that as to the requirements necessary to the validity of soldiers' wills. This question is discussed by Donald MacKay, of Glasgow, Scotland, in a recent issue of the Central Law Journal. Mr. MacKay says: "The privileges attached to a soldier's will originated, it is said, in the legions of Julius Caesar. One cannot be certain as to that, but that they sprang out of the Roman law is generally accepted by legal historians. The Roman required the observance of numerous solemnities in the making of wills, far more than English law requires, but all this red tape was dispensed with as regards the wills of soldiers in expeditions, that is when they were on active service, as Caesar's legions were in Gaul, or the British expeditionary force in Belgium. The Roman soldier's will was held valid, though made when he was under age; though not written, if sufficiently proved by witnesses; and though devoid of all formalities. In British law these same rules have obtained, and in the course of time have been amplified."

After giving illustrations where verbal declarations, letters, and unsigned memoranda in note books, writing on fly leaves of Bibles, pencil notings, and so on, had been given effect to as wills by British courts, Mr. MacKay continues: "Now it is plain that, however just it may be to allow all this looseness in the case of soldiers, it opens a wide door to abuse, irregularity and even deliberate fraud, and therefore the Roman authorities wisely limited the privileges to soldiers on actual military service. Some authorities say that the words in expedition imply an event stricter limitation, and that the soldier must have been on a definite expedition. Our courts, while adhering to the general rule of the Roman law, have differed as to what the conditions referred to exactly meant. In some cases it has been held that a soldier sent abroad to a foreign station in time of peace is on actual military service, and one judge held the doctrine applicable to any soldier in the regular army, as opposed to volunteer forces. On the other hand, the privilege was refused in the case of an officer who had left England to take over a command in the Indian army, and died in Mysore, and that even though he was actively discharging the duties of his command, and was at any moment liable to be called upon to march with his division to whatever point the exigencies of a native war then being carried out in India might require. Yet apparently he had not gone on any actual military expedition the court refused to recognize him as a soldier on actual military service. That case has not been overruled, but it may be taken for granted that it is too strict, and savors too much of the pedantic to be now acceptable."

In view of these conflicting cases, says Mr. MacKay, Sir Francis Jeune, when the Boer cases came before him, attempted to formulate a rule that would be generally acceptable. In his opinion two things were essential in order to be a soldier on active service, or to be entitled to the privileges of a soldier's will. First, a state of war must exist, and second, some active step should be taken by the testator towards joining the forces in the field. Applying the foregoing rules to present circumstances, Mr. MacKay concludes that the privileges referred to will undoubtedly extend to all men in the expeditionary force in the present war, or who may be drafted away in connection with it.

But is it confined to them? Mr. MacKay asks: "Are the rest of the regular army and the territorial and other troops excluded? Very difficult questions may arise on this point. It is said in some quarters that every one who is doing military work at the present moment is in actual military service, but if, as has been already done, the court smiles the Roman restriction of an expedition that view is too sweeping." Mr. MacKay's own opinion is that the reason for the Roman rule was that the soldier was in a foreign country where facilities for will-making were not available and the danger and circumstances in which he was placed did not favor elaborate consideration and deliberation, but that when the soldier returned to his own country the necessity for giving him any special privileges ceased. Similarly in the present case, any man who is not out of the United Kingdom, has plenty of time, opportunity and facilities to put right his affairs in proper form, and therefore should be required, when making his will, to conform to the strict rules of testamentary disposition.
